Communists Of Capital And Backers Face Inquiry

House Group Says 'Surprise' Witnesses Will Be Questioned On Red 'Beachhead'

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

Some well-known and "surprising" witnesses will be called by the House Un-American Activities Committee Tuesday to say whether they helped establish a Communist "beachhead" in Washington.

The committee said yesterday the first witnesses would be "some very wealthy people who have contributed to the Communist Party," some of whose names would come as a great surprise to the public. A committee official, who refused to identify any in advance, said some were members of the party and others were sympathizers.

The committee believes, he said, that the Communist Party was established in the District in the 1930s "to serve as a beachhead for infiltration of the Government." That point, he added, would be brought out in later hearings this year.

Membership Drop Cited

He said party membership here had dropped from 416 members a few months ago to 273 at present. He added:

"We understand that some of them have gone underground, so the drop may not represent a genuine decline in strength."

Hearings will be held Tuesday and Wednesday.

In another move yesterday; the committee described the American Slav Congress as a potential Soviet fifth column operating in violation of the 1933 treaty recognizing Red Russia.

In a 134-page report, the committee said the Slav Congress was a Communist front designed to subvert 10 million Americans by fear and by "poisonous and lying propaganda." The organization was described as the American section of a world-wide "pan-Slav" movement whose "guiding star" was Russian Gen. Alexander Gundorov.

Twice in its report the committee emphasized that the great majority of Slavic Americans were anti-Communist and completely loyal to America. These, it insisted, must be "protected from intimidation and victimization by foreign governments or their agents."

"Baseless," He Declares

In New York, the Congress' executive secretary, George Pirinsky, told the Associated Press all the committee's charges were "baseless" and that the Congress was "purely an American organization." He scoffed at the committee's charge that the Congress followed the Red party line as "ridiculous" and added that he had

Curbs Sought On Spending On A-Projects

Senate Unit Aims At Cost Overruns On Construction

By the United Press

A Senate Appropriations Subcommittee yesterday proposed a brake on free spending for atomic energy projects.

The group approved an amendment to keep the Atomic Energy Commission from spending beyond its budget for construction projects unless the budget director approves and gives Congress a detailed explanation.

The limitation would apply only to building projects of more than $500,000.

Chairman Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) of the subcommittee—which handles 1949-50 funds for the Atomic Commission and other independent Government offices—said the restriction was aimed at keeping down "overruns" on projects which mushroom in cost beyond original estimates.

It also grew out of increasing criticism in Congress of some of the commission's cost-plus-fixed-fee contracts.

One example, O'Mahoney said, was a new plutonium plant at the Hanford (Wash.) atomic center on which the cost shot up from an estimated six million dollars, which Congress approved, to a final total of about 25 million dollars.

This overrun provided Senator Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R., Iowa) with one count in the "incredible mismanagement" charges which he is trying to prove against Atomic Chairman David E. Lilienthal. The House-Senate Atomic Energy Committee is investigating Hickenlooper's charges in public hearings which will resume Tuesday.

The Senate subcommittee amendment specifically would ban use of any part of the Atomic Energy Commission's funds to:

1. Start any new construction project not included in its budget for the current fiscal year.

2. Begin any new project on which cost estimates have grown beyond the figure in the commis-

Coplon Trial Moving Into Payoff Round

Only 4 Witnesses Yet to Be Called In Espionage Case

By the United Press

Judith Coplon's espionage trial moves into the payoff round this week when a Federal jury is expected to decide whether she was a Russian spy or the victim of a fantastic frameup.

Four more witnesses, three of them on the Government's side, remained to be called when the trial resumes Monday. But their testimony was expected to be brief and of secondary importance.

Courtroom observers looked for the opposing lawyers to finish their summations by mid-week and for Federal Judge Albert L. Reeves to charge the eight men and four women jurors Wednesday or Thursday.

The 28-year-old defendant may make one more trip to the witness chair for a friendly re-examination by her counsel, Archibald Palmer. But her real ordeal ended Friday when she exploded under a raking cross-examination by

Barkley's Plane Forced to Land As Engine Fails

Columbus, Ohio, June 25 (U.P.).—A Washington-to-St. Louis bound plane carrying Vice President Alben W. Barkley and other top Government officials made an emergency landing at Port Columbus here late today.

No one was injured and the plane proceeded to St. Louis after an hour's delay.

Besides Barkley, others aboard the plane included Attorney General Tom C. Clark, Postmaster General Jesse Donaldson, Secretary of Air W. Stuart Symington and W. A. Dawson, a presidential aide.

The airplane, Lockheed Lodestar piloted by Jack H. Huth, 28, of Oil City, Pa., landed at Port Columbus after an engine went bad 60 miles southwest of here. Repairs were made and the plane resumed the flight for St. Louis.

Another Official Disputes Move

Alabama Klan Head Orders Members to Take Off Hoods

Birmingham, Ala., June 25 (AP).—The head of the Ku Klux Klan in Alabama tonight directed members to stop wearing hoods. Another high officer said, however, that no action was taken on the order.

Dr. E. P. Pruitt, chairman of the board of governors of the Federated Ku Klux Klan, Inc., said he directed that members "discard their visors (hoods) * * * except for initiation ceremonies and similar ceremonies."

Later, William Hugh Morris, director of the Federated Klan, said:

"He doesn't have authority to hand out that order. I seriously doubt that such action will be taken. If the (anti-masking) law is passed, we will raise the visors, unless the law is declared unconstitutional."

This was a reference to a bill pending in the state legislature to ban wearing of masks in the state.

When newsmen telephoned Dr. Pruitt regarding Morris' statement, he said: "I am the presiding officer of the Klan."

Morris said there had been some discussion by the Klan's six-man board of governors regarding the removal of the hoods. But he added:

"We haven't done anything. Why should we surrender anything?"

Hooded, white-robed men have been active in the Birmingham area recently, flogging persons, threatening others and burning crosses.

[State Attorney General Albert A. Carmichael told the United Press he would file proceedings to revoke the charter of the Federated Ku Klux Klan as soon as he could prepare the case.—Editor's note.]

52 Drowned By Flash Flood In Mexican Town

Pachuca, Mexico, June 25 (U.P.).—A 20-minute flash flood following a cloudburst last night left 52 men, women and children drowned, 50 seriously injured and 40 missing.

Torrents from the hills caused heavy damage in this centuries-old silver mining town, tearing away steel doors from buildings and crumbling thick brick walls.

Authorities said 19 women, 15 men and several children were known to be dead. They believed the toll would grow, but thought most of those missing were safe.

Hail was piled up in many places. It was about 4 feet high on some desks in the ruined police station.

A child was frozen to death under a pile of hailstones, just out of sight of his mother, who could not force open the ice-jammed door that separated them.

Another child was torn from the arms of his mother as she tried to climb a telephone pole with him to escape the flood.

West Orders End of Berlin Rail Strike

14,000 Workers Win No. 1 Demand For All of Their Pay in Westmarks

Berlin, June 25 (AP).—The Western commanders tonight ordered 14,000 Berlin rail strikers to go back to work.

They said the strikers would receive 100 per cent of their wages in Westmarks, their No. 1 demand. They also said the strikers would be cut off the unemployment compensation rolls if they did not pick up their tools by Tuesday.

Mayor Ernst Reuter said the strike "probably will be settled" on the basis of the Western commanders' plan drafted tonight at a stormy meeting. The non-Communist strikers, who walked out 35 days ago, causing what amounted to a second blockade of the city, called a meeting for Sunday. It will be followed by a session of the union's executive board.

[Heinz Bracht, chairman of the rail union, told a correspondent of the New York Herald Tribune the union's executive board would issue a directive Sunday for a return to work by Tuesday.—Editor's note.]

No Relief for Holdouts

Blaming the strike for paralyzing Berlin's economic life, the commandants said the high direct cost to the city in unemployment relief for railwaymen was 379,000 Westmarks ($109,100) a week.

The city was ordered to stop relief to strikers who do not resume work by Tuesday. An exception was made for men afraid to return to employment with the Soviet-controlled railway system and who want to quit the railway permanently. They may keep on relief by declaring in writing the intention of looking elsewhere for work and of not interfering with the railway.

The strikers have been drawing unemployment relief and union benefits in Westmarks. They used to draw railway pay in Eastmarks. The Westmark is worth about four times the Eastmark.

When the strike began May 21, there were 3000 in the non-Communist union (UGO). Now there are about 14,000.

No Penalties, Russians Promise

The commandants said the strike no longer was justified because:

Soviet Maj. Gen. Pavel Kvashnin had assured them former strikers would not be victimized; because the Foreign Ministers' Paris agreement obligated the four powers to restore Berlin to normal, and because the strike imposed "an unwarranted burden" on the Western Powers to bring in supplies by air.

There was no indication the Soviet-controlled railway administration had changed its refusal to recognize the UGO.

The airlift carried 8883 tons to Berlin today, on the eve of its first anniversary. By Sunday American and British cargo planes will have flown nearly two million tons of food and fuel to Berlin since June 26, 1948.

French Honor Hoover For 'Engineering Feats'

New York, June 25 (AP).—Former President Herbert Hoover today received a French award for his "many outstanding engineering feats" and for "leadership in fostering international scientific cooperation."

The award came from the Association des Ingenieurs-Docteurs de France, an organization of engineers and scientists.

Two others similarly honored were Boris Pregel, president of the Canadian Radium & Uranium Corp., and William Dubilier, founder of the Cornell-Dubilier Electric Co. of New York City.

Digging for 10 Years

Finds 'Demonstrate' St. Peter Was Buried Beneath Vatican

Rome, June 25 (NYHT).—Ten years of excavation work beneath the Basilica of St. Peter's have "demonstrated" that St. Peter was buried there, a spokesman for the Vatican said today.

Hundreds of truckloads of earth have been removed from under the great church. Extensive remains of an ancient Roman cemetery and of the first St. Peter's Church have been found.

The discoveries "confirm the Christian tradition that Peter, after his martyrdom, was buried near Nero's circus," according to Giuseppe Nicolosi, a leader in the excavation work.

Nicolosi did not say whether actual bones of St. Peter or his tomb had been found, but he said evidence was discovered that several altars have stood, during the centuries, at the spot under the dome of St. Peter's which long has been thought to have been the site of the tomb.

Persons speculating about the excavations have long argued that the bones of St. Peter may have been removed from his tomb to protect them when the Saracens invaded Rome in 846, or for some other reasons at some other time.

Extensive stretches of the original 16-centuries-old Basilica of St. Peter's foundations were uncovered by workmen using hammers, drills and even pneumatic hammers, Nicolosi said.

The first St. Peter's Basilica was consecrated in 326 by Constantine the Great, Rome's first Christian emperor, but it was replaced by the present huge structure four centuries ago when the original St. Peter's began to collapse.

The excavations showed Constantine had to do a "mastodonic job" of filling up the old Roman cemetery before he could begin raising the walls of the original St. Peter's, Nicolosi said. Although a burial tablet on one of the tombs indicated Nero's circus was in the area, Constantine did not make use of the walls of the circus but started his foundations on virgin clay. The enormous extra work that his choice of a site entailed "would not have been undertaken if it were not for the fact that he (Constantine) knew that the place was the site of some specially venerated tomb, namely, that of the Prince of the Apostles," Nicolosi argued.

Others familiar with the work said the site on which Constantine built was so poorly fitted for a basilica that the emperor had to move at least 40,000 cubic yards of earth to level the area and fill in above the old cemetery. On the north side the emperor had to slice away part of the Vatican hill, while on the south side he had to build a 21-foot-high foundation

'Secret' Foes Of Merger Denounced

'Powerful Forces' Accused of Effort To Prevent End of Service Bickering

Armed services reorganization has been stalled in the House by "secret enemies," the chairman of a civilian committee backing Government reorganization charged yesterday.

In a statement, Dr. Robert L. Johnson, chairman of the Citizens Committee for Reorganization of the Executive Branch of the Government, declared:

"Powerful forces are plainly engaged in a last-ditch effort to defeat a measure which would end bickering in the armed services.

"This bill has the publicly avowed support of citizens of the highest caliber, but apparently it also has secret enemies stronger than we know.

House Delay Cited

"How otherwise can we account for the delay with which this bill has met in the House after it passed the Senate without a dissenting vote?"

Dr. Johnson did not attempt to identify the "secret enemies" or "powerful forces."

The bill to which he referred was sponsored by Senator Tydings (D., Md.) and passed the Senate May 26. It would give the Defense Secretary "direction, authority and control" over the Secretaries of Army, Navy and Air.

It also would establish a chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who would have no vote but would serve as military adviser to the Defense Secretary and the President. Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower has acted temporarily as such a chairman.

Dr. Johnson quoted numerous authorities to show the Tydings bill would save at least one billion and possibly 1½ billion dollars a year. With his statement was a pamphlet contending: "In 1938 we spent one billion dollars for defense. Today we waste that much."

Criticizes Vinson

He criticized Chairman Vinson (D., Ga.) in whose House Armed Services Committee the Tydings bill lay for three weks before a hearing was scheduled for next Tuesday. Vinson denied there had been any delay in considering the measure, but expressed the belief it would increase rather than minimize the cost of the Military Establishment.

"It is somewhat surprising," said Dr. Johnson yesterday, "to learn that Chairman Vinson has expressed doubt of the potential savings to be realized through this bill. With the highest possible respect for Mr. Vinson, it seems to me that, in this instance, he is opposing his views to those of a formidable array of authorities."

Vinson said he had invited Defense Secretary Louis Johnson to give the committee a "documented list of savings" that could be accomplished under the Tydings bill.

Johnson reported he had a little queasiness in his stomach which caused him to enter Chester Hospital for X-rays.

Prince Georges Slot Machine Setup Interests Costello Ring

The national racket organization of Frank Costello has been preparing to "take over" the operation of legalized slot machines in Prince Georges County, it was learned yesterday by The Washington Post.

A highly reliable source said a representative of the Costello syndicate is in Washington with $100,000 for "incidental expenses."

The move of the Costello interests has been checked, of course, for the time being because of the ruling Thursday by Circuit Judge Charles C. Marbury that the county's new slot machine law is unconstitutional.

Costello is a New Yorker and a former convict. Last March he was identified in the California Crime Commission report as the boss of a national slot machine syndicate which collects at least two billion dollars annually.

The Washington Post's informant said the slot machine operators now in the county would have bitterly opposed the syndicate's attempts to take over, setting the stage for possible gang conflict.

The slot machine law which county voters approved at a June 2 referendum stipulated that only county residents of two year's standing could operate slot machines in the county.

However, the Costello mob intended to get around the provision, the informant said, by having local "fronts" acquire licenses for the syndicate.

Costello's representative here, he continued, is staying in a Washington hotel and is supposed to have $100,000 on deposit in a Washington bank.

This man, the informant said, has approached several persons in the county and asked them to pose as "fronts" for the Costello mob. One of the persons approached

3-Day Week Reported Aim In Coal Mines

Bituminous Field Plan Believed Proposed To Keep Pits Open

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., June 25 (AP).—If the Nation's coal operators will agree to a three-day work week, John L. Lewis was reported willing today to keep the mines open while he debates new contract terms with them.

That would mean that the 400,000 miners who today began their annual holiday would have part-time work when the 10-day vacation period ends July 5.

The reduction to three days a week also would fit right in with the United Mine Workers' president's expressed wish to stabilize employment in the industry.

But it would be a sharp departure from the traditional "no contract, no work" policy of the union. The present contracts between the bituminous operators and the UMW expire June 30.

The report of the Lewis offer was heard here while negotiations with more than half the soft coal industry were in recess until Tuesday.

It said the short work week would be in effect during the negotiating period only.

Lewis himself would say nothing about the report, but a well-in-

World Bank May Make First India Loan This Week

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development is considering several loans to India, it was learned yesterday. The bank has under study several agricultural, hydroelectric and railroad rehabilitation projects, and approval of the first loan may be forthcoming this week.

At the invitation of the Indian Government, the bank sent a mission headed by Assistant Loan Director A. S. G. Hoar to India last January. The group stayed until March, making a general survey of the country in an effort to determine what projects might become the practical basis for a loan.

The project that would seem to have good chance for approval is rehabilitation of the Indian railroads. Of India's seven thousand locomotives, nearly 2000 are 40 years old.

Lightning Hits Four Boys, Killing One

Thunderstorms Fail To Cool D. C.; High Of 92 Forecast Today

Four boys were struck by lightning and one of them killed yesterday afternoon as thunderstorms heightened the humidity and failed to cool off a sweltering Washington.

The four boys were returning from a movie at 25th st. and Benning rd. ne. and were in an open field alongside the Langston Golf Course.

Howard Gardner, 11, 2107 Maryland ave. ne., who survived the bolt, told police that there was "a flash and all of a sudden we were on the ground. We thought we fell. We didn't know we were knocked down."

The boy who died was identified as Alfred Lyons, 11, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward W. Lyons, of 2106 Maryland ave. ne. He and Eugene Johnson, 1121 21st pl. ne., didn't get up. Johnson was taken unconscious to Gallinger Hospital.

Gardner ran home and called his mother. The fourth boy, ultimately identified as Charles Coleman, 6, 1100 21st pl. ne., also ran home after picking himself up. He was later taken to Casualty Hospital by a relative. Examination there showed he was unhurt.

A rescue squad and Gallinger ambulance arrived and the Lyons boy was pronounced dead at the scene. Police said he was badly burned about the legs.

High temperature recorded yesterday was 89 at 2:18 p. m., and low was 76 at 6:46 a. m. Humidity remained high throughout the day.

Weather forecasters said the temperature will be "more of the same" for today, with a probable high of 92. The day will be mostly fair, but there may be some showers within 25 to 50 miles of the District.

The brief thunderstorm that hit most of Washington completely missed the Weather Bureau observation station at National Airport. Police said it knocked down electric wires in the 900 block of Butternut st. nw., and at Minnesota ave., and Benning rd. ne.

Residents of Falls Church were under strict orders not to use water for lawns or car washing and police squads cruised to enforce the order.

South Carolinian Tells Constituent Why He Opposes District Measure

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

In a letter to a South Carolina resident made public yesterday, Representative McMillan (D., S. C.) reiterated his opposition to District home rule and hinted that the movement is Communist-tainted.

The letter written by the chairman of the House District Committee was released by the Washington Home Rule Committee, a local citizen group.

Asked to comment on his letter, McMillan last night said: "It is my intention to hold hearings on home rule and bring it to a vote this year, if I can. But if they want to make a fight out of this, it may string out consideration of this matter a while longer."

Sponsors to Testify

The Home Rule Committee said the letter was written in reply to an inquiry from a South Carolina resident who sought his views on home rule. The name of the resident was withheld.

Senate and House sponsors of four pending home rule bills will testify at a 10 a. m. Tuesday home rule hearing. Earlier, McMillan promised to confer on setting another hearing date for the 50-odd citizen-witnesses who have asked to appear.

McMillan's letter concluded that he had received less than a dozen letters from people in Washington in favor of home rule; "and of these, with the exception of two or three, all were people who had communistic tendencies and were interested in securing control of the Federal Government."

The McMillan letter follows in full:

"Your letter relative to the government of the city of Washington was received this morning.

"I would like to state that our forefathers designated a 10-mile-square plot of property as a seat and capital of the United States. This property belongs to every citizen of the United States, and I, as a Congressman, have no authority to delegate my legislative power to a municipal government.

"The people of the United States have far too much invested in the Nation's Capital to turn it over to a city or State government. All of the people from South Carolina, who reside in Washington, can vote in South Carolina, if they so desire. The city of Washington is the only city in the United States without a bonded debt, and everyone knows it is the cleanest city in the world.

"I do not know who your friends are in Washington who desire home rule, as I have not had 12 letters from people in Washington

Neomycin Shows Promise Against Tuberculosis

New York, June 25 (AP).—A new chemical from mold, neomycin, has successfully passed animal tests against the germs of human tuberculosis, it was disclosed today.

The announcement was made at a conference at the American Museum of Natural History.

Dr. Gladys L. Hobby, of the biological laboratory of Charles Pfizer & Co., Brooklyn, described tests.

Dr. Hobby said neomycin has protected animals against deadly doses of human tuberculosis germs without having toxic effects.

"It is early to interpret the effect of neomycin on experimental human tuberculosis," she said, "but the results at this stage are suggestive."

Neomycin was isolated by Dr. Selman A. Waksman, who also discovered and isolated streptomycin. Commenting on chemical treatments for tuberculosis, Dr. Waksman said:

"Before long, we will talk about tuberculosis as we do now about pneumonia."

Navy Wind Tunnel Dedication Monday

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

Nazi supersonic wind tunnels, stepped up to an American rush of more than five times the speed of sound, will be formally dedicated here Monday.

Also scheduled for unveiling at the 40-million-dollar Naval Ordnance Laboratory at White Oak, Md., is the all-American indoor firing range in which guided missiles will be photographed in supersonic flight.

Naval ordnance scientists have already recorded a record-breaking air speed of 5.18 times that of sound in the Americanized wind circuit, and have photographed projectiles in that stream at a one-millionth of a second stoppage to show otherwise invisible shock waves forming around the missiles.

Follows Earth's Curve

The 345-foot pressure chamber firing range is so new that its first two shots were triggered Thursday at a special press preview of the facilities to be dedicated Monday. So scientific is its alignment to the earth's curvature that it is "humped" at midsection by one four-thousandth of an inch.

The companion facilities are part, the fundamental research part, of the Nation's growing program of research on airborne weapons and carriers of the future.

Many of the Nation's leading scientists are scheduled to participate in Monday's dedication program. Among those who will be present are Dr. Karl T. Compton, of the National Research and Development Board, and Dr. Harry C. Byrd, president of the University of Maryland.

A week-long symposium on aeroballistics and fluid mechanics will follow for about 800 scientists. And during the last two days of the symposium, the fluid dynamics division of the American Physical Society will meet.

Used for V-2 Rockets

The wind tunnels to be dedicated are those used by the Nazis to uncover secrets to flight dynamics sufficient to enable design and development of the V-2 rockets of World War II. The V-2's traveled at four to five times the speed of sound; United States wants to better the flight pattern, and provide for flights at least twice as fast.

The new firing range, more correctly an aeroballistics range, is expected to provide photographic study of missiles traveling at speeds to perhaps 10 times that of sound. Models of missiles, scaled down to pencil size, will be fired through the chamber and photographed both horizontally and vertically at 25 camera stations along 300 feet of the range length.

The range will permit firing up to speeds of 5000 miles an hour, according to its designer and builder, B. M. Shepard, civilian scientist at NOL. Sound, at sea level, travels 746 miles an hour. The 500-mile-an-hour present maximum is roughly 6½ times sound's travel speed, but further improvements on the range may move the maximum well up to 10 times the speed of sound, Shepard said.

Information on such subjects as pressure distribution, shock wave patterns and flight characteristics of projectiles are to be gleaned by scientists from data taken on firings in the NOL range.

Tests with small caliber bullets fired through the range might also disclose heretofore unknown flight characteristics of small-arms projectiles, and lead to their further improvement, range scientists said.

Largest in World

The Naval Ordnance Laboratory, largest and most modern of its kind in the world, is the cornerstone of the projected 311 million dollar supersonic wind tunnel program that the Senate armed forces committee approved earlier this month. The program, labeled a top priority project by the committee, provides for the building of 22 wind tunnels capable of testing models of piloted aircraft and guided missiles designed to travel at speeds of 650 to 6000 miles an hour.

NOL's present seven wind tunnels were captured by American troops at Kochel, Bavaria, in 1945, after their transfer there by the Nazis from their original site at Peenemunde, on the Baltic. Dismantled, they were removed to White Oak, Md.

Renamed the White Oak Tunnels, they differ from most wind tunnels in that they operate on a vacuum principle rather than fan-propelled air. A metal sphere, 52 feet in diameter, is evacuated to a 99.5 per cent vacuum by huge engines to create the terrific air-suction force. A special valve that can be opened fully in less than one second initiates the rush of air through connecting tunnels, and past the model under test.

The record-breaking airspeed of 5:18 imes the speed of sound, or nearly 4000 miles an hour, was established in a 16-by-16-inch working sectelon of one of the tunnels.

Hunt Denies 'Influence' Contracts

By The Associated Press

James V. Hunt, management counselor here, said yesterday that "anyone who says I ever offered to get him Government contracts through 'influence' is a liar."

Hunt said he would welcome a Congressional investigation of a contract he had with Paul Grindle, a Framingham, Mass., furniture manufacturer.

In a story carried by the New York Herald Tribune Tuesday, Grindle was quoted as saying that he had given Hunt a $1000 fee. This, he said, was to be followed by $500 monthly payments for a year, plus 5 per cent of the gross on any Government contract he received.

Grindle said Hunt had mentioned several Government officials, and had implied he had considerable influence.

Never Tried to Sell Influence

In his statement yesterday, his first since the story appeared, Hunt said:

"I have never tried to sell 'influence.' And none of the people I know in Government service are subject to 'influence.'"

Hunt, a former lieutenant colonel who later served as a War Assets Administration official, said that if it weren't for men like him, small businessmen would have trouble doing business with the Government.

His explanation:

"There are today in Washington so many regulatory bodies, and so many procurement agencies, that the businessman, unless he can afford to maintain a full time Washington office, must employ part time representation here, either on a retainer or a commission basis.

"It is not a question of 'influence.' It is not a question of a 'middleman.'"

Grindle, reached at Briarcliff, N. Y., said:

"I'd be delighted to have a congressional committee judge whether Colonel Hunt or I am a liar. It is useless for me to make a direct reply to Colonel Hunt's statement. He has already been branded by bigger people than I ever hope to be."

To do business with the Government, Hunt said, the businessman either must come here himself, or hire someone here to help him.

"To deny the small businessman the right to do this," he said "is in effect to deny him the right to do business with his Government."

Know the Workings

Hunt said he and his assistants know the workings of the various Government agencies, and that he has many friends on their staffs.

But, he said, "I have never asked any of them to do anything that was not entirely proper. If I had, they would have thrown me out of their offices, and rightly so."

He said no Herald Tribune reporter had attempted to check the facts with him before the story appeared. The Herald Tribune had no comment on Hunt's statement.

However, the newspaper's Sunday edition said in an article dealing with Hunt's statement:

"Colonel Hunt issued his statement five days after the New York Herald Tribune published the disclosures of his activities, after repeatedly turning down invitations from Tribune representatives to tell his side of the story."

After the story was published, Chairman Hoey (D., N. C.) of the Senate Investigations Subcommittee ordered a preliminary study of Government contracts to see if a full scale investigation is needed.

Baptists Urge Raising Of Funds by Tithes

Omaha, June 25 (AP).—A resolution urging member churches to desist from raising money by "suppers, bazaars and selling merchandise" was adopted today at its national convention by the Baptist General Conference.

Instead, the resolution urged giving by tithes—a percentage of one's income, usually one tenth.

sion's budget for the current fiscal year.

3. Continue any such project unless the "Bureau of the Budget specifically approves" and gives the House and Senate appropriations committees "detailed explanation."

The "explanation" provision would let the commission go ahead on emergency projects with Budget Bureau approval. But it would have to justify them to Congress.

O'Mahoney said the amendment would "establish a certain brake on expanding expenditures." He said the subcommittee "wanted to avoid encroaching on executive functions." The change, he emphasized, puts responsibility on the Budget Bureau, with Congress keeping fully informed.

The proposed amendment still needs approval by the full appropriations committee to get on the Senate floor. And there, the Senate would have to suspend its rules to act on it because the change constitutes legislation in an appropriations bill.

The Wyoming Democrat said the commission's necessarily great authority to contract for construction is sometimes "an invitation to extravagance."

Politics Laid To Truman on GI Insurance

By the United Press

Fifteen Republican House members, veterans of World War II, accused the Administration last night of "deliberately" holding up payments of Veterans' Administration insurance dividends until 1950, a congressional election year.

"This is a scandalous political performance," the former GI Representatives said in a statement. "The Government first overcharged the veterans for their insurance and now refuses to refund the overcharge until it suits the political purposes of the Truman Administration."

The group urged the support of a resolution by Representative Keating (R., N. Y.) to require that the $2,800,000,000 refund to 16 million World War II former servicemen be made by October 15.

House Veterans Committee Chairman Rankin (D., Miss.) said the Veterans' Administration could not comply with the resolution, even if it were adopted. The agency has said it will start making the payments in January.

Rankin said the rebate became necessary because, under the law, VA insurance premiums are based on an old mortality table. The death rate has declined since the table was drafted.

To make the refunds, the agency must analyze separately each of about 20 million policies. Hundreds of extra workers have been hired for the job, and other hundreds are still to be hired.

"The Veterans' Administration is doing everything possible to get the checks out," Rankin said. "The only people playing politics are those who are charging VA with politics."

The 15 Republicans denied VA's contention that the payments are dividends.

"Deliberately Misleading"

"This is deliberately misleading and untrue," the group said.

"They are not dividends; they are refunds on an overcharge. Imagine the speed with which Mr. Truman's Department of Justice would swing into action if private enterprise had overcharged 16 million people $2,800,000,000 on their insurance policies.

"The record shows clearly and beyond dispute that the Administration is deliberately holding up the money until 1950 because it is a congressional election year."

The statement was issued by Representatives Boggs, Del.; Nixon, Calif.; Davis, Wis.; Patterson, Conn.; Sadlak, Conn.; Ford, Mich.; Velde, Ill.; McCulloch, Ohio; Phillips, Tenn.; Norblad, Oreg.; Van Zandt, Pa.; Smith, Kans.; Miller, Md.; Latham, N. Y., and Nelson, Me.

Industrial War Mobilization, Civil Defense Demilitarized

By The Associated Press

The Administration today placed in civilian hands complete control over the planning of both civil defense and industrial mobilization for any war emergency.

Presidential Assistant John R. Steelman, as acting chairman of the National Security Resources Board, issued orders giving nine Federal agencies planning duties under NSRB direction.

The action is expected to have at least two major results:

1. Revitalize the planning effort, which has languished since December, when the White House began what some officials have called a "quiet demilitarization" of NSRB. The mobilization agency has been moved from the Pentagon Building, and nearly 100 of its officials have departed.

2. To deal the final death-blow to proposals of the disputed "Hopley Report" of last fall. Prepared by Russell J. Hopley, head of the now defunct Office of Civilian Defense Planning, in the Pentagon, the report suggested creation of a full-time operating civil defense office under the Secretary of Defense.

Military Supervision Opposed

President Truman indicated his distaste for such military supervision in March.

Steelman quoted Mr. Truman today in announcing the new plans. The President, he said, has asked for "planning and preparation for civil defense in the event of war, rather than the peacetime operation of a full-scale civil defense program."

Mantime, officials said, NSRB can be expected to resume active work on mobilization plans for every industry. It also has charge of preparing an emergency war powers bill—complete with price control, Priorities and seizure power—for quick action by Congress in case of war.

Under the new system, Steelman said, the military establishment will have responsibility for planning only one phase of civilian participation in defense—protection "against armed attack."

Larson To Plan Relief

The Federal Works Agency, under Jess Larson, was ordered to develop the program of wartime disaster relief. Other agencies given roles in the program:

Federal Security Agency, Atomic Energy Commission, the Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, Interior, Treasury and Justice, and such other agencies as may be added if need arises.

The NSRB itself will not only coordinate planning among these agencies, but will become the clearing house between the Federal Government and the civil defense organizations of States, cities and professional and industrial organizations.

William A. Gill, now NSRB's director of mobilization procedures and organization, was named by Steelman as temporarily in charge of coordination.

Czechs Cut Meat Ration

Prague, Czechoslovakia, une 25 (AP).—The government today announced a cut of about 20 per cent in the meat ration for all Czechoslovaks over 6 years of age. It attributed the cut to drought and shortage of fodder and called it temporary.

Purge Education

Chinese Reds Ban Teaching Of Dr. Sun

Shanghai, China (Sunday), June 26 (U.P.).—The Communist government of Shanghai today abolished Boy Scout organizations, military training, "reactionary" textbooks and the teaching of classical literature.

The action, conforming with measures taken elsewhere in the world by Communist-run governments, was included in a sweeping purge of the educational system set up by the Nationalist government.

It banned the teachings of China's "father," Sun Yat Sen, and replaced it with a new subject called "political knowledge."

New textbooks on history, geography and the Chinese language are to be printed for the schools.

Loss of China Means 3d War, Chennault Says

By the United Press

Maj. Gen. Claire L. Chennault, former chief of the Flying Tigers, said yesterday that a "third and more horrible world war is inevitable if the United States permits Communism to conquer China."

"We will make a billion enemies," he said.

"The Government wants to spent 150 million dollars on Korean recovery. You could gold-plate Korea a foot deep and it won't do any good if you lose China. The Communists will take over whenever they want to," Chennault said.

The crisis—the crisis which he said will make the difference between war and peace—will come here in Washington "within the next week or 10 days," Chennault asserted.

Whatever the State Department policy in China, "others are awake to the danger," Chennault said. He mentioned Senators and Congressmen who have stormed at the Administration's China policy, and high military figures who would have to fight any war with Russia.

British Defy Blockade; Ship Sails From Shanghai

Shanghai, June 25 (U.P.).—The British-owned China coast freighter Foochow, guarded by the guns of the British sloop Black Swan, sailed today for Japan in defiance of the Nationalist blockade of Shanghai.

Liberals in Greece Balk at Serving Under Tsaldaris

Athens, Greece, June 25 (A').—Sophocles Venizelos said today the Liberal Party would not join a government headed by Constantin Tsaldaris, Populist leader. Despite this setback, Tsaldaris continued his efforts to form a cabinet.

Tsaldaris, deputy premier and foreign minister, was asked yesterday by King Paul to form a government after the death of 88-year-old Themistokles Sophoulis.

Venizelos, labor minister under Sophoulis, has been leader of a rebel wing of the Liberals. Since the death of Sophoulis he also is leader of the regular wing.

Prague, Czechoslovakia, June 25 (U.P.).—Communist Minister of Justice Alexei Cepicka declared today the government already has enough evidence to convict Roman Catholic bishops and other church officials for their "hostile attitude toward the state."

Cepicka, son-in-law of President Klement Gottwald, also:

1. Angrily accused Archbishop Josef Beran of "lying" about government threats to religious freedom and the rights of the church in Czechoslovakia.

2. Charged the Vatican with preventing an agreement between church and state here and with ordering bishops and other dignitaries to create "tension" and disrupt the Communist regime.

3. Asserted that high Czech Catholic clergymen cooperated with foreign enemies and gave them "confidential internal information."

Government's Spokesman

Cepicka is head of the church section of the Communist Central Action Committee. He was the government's spokesman in unsuccessful negotiations between church and state.

Czech Catholic churchmen, Cepicka said, must "bear the consequences" for their recent activities.

"The high reactionary clergy will shortly find out that it is not possible in this country to press freely priests and laymen into activity of an antistate nature," he warned.

"It is possible to name a list of deeds convicting bishops and ordinaries for a hostile attitude toward the state," he said. "The public well knows them and will be informed about many more."

Cepicka spoke just one week after Archbishop Beran told this dominantly Catholic country that he soon may be silenced and to beware any "confession" attributed to him.

Church sources meanwhile reported the Communist government had seized nine Roman Catholic convents and monasteries in Slovakia and has stepped up the arrests of priests in that province.

An official government communique from Bucharest announced tonight that all Romanian churches except the Roman Catholic Church had united this week in a pledge of allegiance to the Communist-run People's Democratic regime.

The communique said the resolution was passed Thursday night at a meeting of representatives of nine churches under the chairmanship of Orthodox Patriarch Justinian.

It apparently marked the beginning of another campaign against the Catholic Church in eastern European satellite states.

India to Become Republic in January

New Delhi, India, June 25 (A').—India will be proclaimed a republic January 26, the government announced today.

The constituent assembly, which adjourned last week, will reassemble July 30. It will complete its work on the new constitution by October 2, the government said.

U. S. Craft Join British Test

London, June 25 (A').—The skies over England sizzled with American jet fighters and roared with United States Superforts today in the opening of a nine-day air test of Britain's defenses.

United States "Shooting Star" jets joined RAF "Meteors" in exercises to keep "enemy" B-29 Superforts away from England's vital targets. On the ground, British, French, Belgian and American officers kept score of the maneuvers.

It is the biggest aerial maneuver since the war, and it is Britain's first major test of its ability to keep the atom bombs away.

Two Americans were hurt as five persons bailed out of a Superfort which developed engine trouble over Liverpool. Waldo Frank, correspondent for the Los Angeles Times, suffered a shoulder injury, and Capt. Harold Gershom, a crewman, injured his left knee.

The sky "war" broke out unannounced at noon. Radar screens picked up "bogeys" all over the sky. Curt messages came from thousands of spotters for transmission to antiaircraft batteries and fighter strips throughout most of England.

At 3 p. m. an "enemy" force of more than 30 bombers hit the East coast, penetrated 40 miles inside the defenses and turned north. The Fighter Command would not say whether the jets and ack-ack had succeeded in "shooting down" the bombers.

1,000,000 Flee Soviet Zone

Frankfurt, Germany, June 25 (U.P.).—More than one million frightened Germans from the Soviet Zone have braved rugged terrain and Russian army patrols to slip through the Iron Curtain into American-occupied Germany and Austria, Allied authorities said today.

These authorities put the traffic at about 12,000 refugees every month.

In addition, U. S. Army officials estimated at least 10,000 Soviet soldiers and officers have deserted the Red Army since the war's end and are now in western Germany and Austria.

E. W. Lawrence of the Military Government Refugee Branch said 978,000 refugee Germans were registered for food cards last October.

"no respect" for the committee itself.

Already labeled subversive by the Department of Justice, the Slav Congress was described by the House committee as "Moscow-inspired and directed federation of Communist-dominated organizations." In detail the committee charged that:

1. The Slav Congress had resorted to "incitement to civil disobedience" and "an attitude amounting to treasonable defiance of this Government."

2. Its real objectives "have been primarily military."

3. Some of its leaders, including Pirinsky, were Reds and President Leo Krzycki had long "demonstrated his devotion for the Soviet Union."

4. George Wuchinich, nationality officer of the Congress, was "one of the most dangerous individuals" in its ranks because of military training and espionage experience with the wartime OSS.

(In Pittsburgh, according to the Associated Press, Wuchinich, 41, declared, "My war record as a volunteer and as a paratrooper who served 27 months overseas behind enemy lines in Europe and in China is a record of devotion to my country which no member of the House Un-American Activities Committee can match. I won five decorations, including the Distinguished Service Cross. I defy the committee at any time to question my loyalty to my country or the principles for which it stands.")

5. Slavs were concentrated in industrial centers, the Congress claiming that 51 per cent of workers in the coal and steel industries were of Slavic extraction.

6. There was "complete cooperation" between the Slav Congress and Henry Wallace's Progressive Party, which "had from the outset been sparked by the Communist Party."

7. One of the "prime movers" in launching the Congress was Bronislaw Konstantine Gebert, a "charter member of the Communist Party, U.S.A." Gebert, without State Department knowledge, left the country in 1947 aboard the Polish liner Batory, aboard which Gerhart Eisler fled last month.

Formed in 1942

The American Slav Congress, the committee reported, was formed in Detroit in 1942. The purpose behind it was said to be mobilization of slav workers in basic industries behind the war effort after Hitler turned Russia.

The committee said there were 12 nationality categories of Slavs, whom the Congress endeavors to enlist behind Russian "designs for world empire" and "incite" against the United States. In doing this, the committee continued, the units of the Congress "do not hesitate to threaten reprisals against relatives in Iron Curtain countries."

The Congress and its affiliates, the committee charged, had cooperated with embassies in "hoodwinking and victimizing skilled technicians" to migrate to other countries and in soliciting "vast sums" for relief. It said it was questionable whether any of these funds ever reached those for whom they were collected, since they were "routed through Communist channels."

The committee said fraternal organizations affiliated with the Congress controlled millions of dollars collected from Slavic Americans for insurance and other purposes.

Finally, the committee charged, Soviet and satellite embassies had cooperated actively with the work of the Slav Congress despite treaty obligations of 1933. At that time, as a condition of recognition by the United States, the Soviets pledged themselves not to propagandize in America or attempt to overthrow the United States form of government by force.

These 10 recommendations were included in the report:

1. Strict enforcement of the agreement of 1933 and its application to satellite embassies.

2. Strict reciprocity in admission of Soviet or setellite nationals so that those admitted would be no more than the number of American citizens admitted to Soviet and satellite countries.

3. Protection of Slavic Americans from intimidation.

4. Aid loyal Slavs and their organizations in counteracting subversive influences.

5. Cancellation of citizenship and deportation of alien Communists.

6. Revocation of licenses of fraternal insurance companies that engage in subversive activities.

7. Prosecution for frauds by spurious relief organizations.

8. Stricter licensing laws for relief organizations

9. Barring foreign Communists from admission to the United States. Since no exceptions were recommended, this might include the Soviet Ambassador.

10. Reprocity regarding protection of American citizens in Communist countries.

'Slav Congress' Cool About 'Poison-Peddlers'

New York, June 25 (U.P.).—The American Slav Congress tonight declared it does not "give a damn" what the "poison-peddlers" of the House Un-American Activities Committee think of the organization's work.

The Slav group issued an angry statement denying congressional charges that it is a Communist front organization.

"It is an expression of the mental disorder and general hysteria which has been sweeping the country and which President Truman rightly condemned a few days ago, forgetting to include himself among those who have contributed most for this unhealthy state of mind," it said.

"We don't give a damn what 'poison-peddlers' like members of the Un-American Activities Committee think of the work of the American Slav Congress."

16 Lutheran Ministers 'Vanish' in Soviet Zone

Hamburg, Germany, June 25 (U.P.).—The Hamburg Church Council reported today that 16 Lutheran ministers have disappeared in the Soviet zone.

The council gave no details, but said its information was based on "reliable reports" from eastern Germany.

Syria to Vote for One Man

Damascus, Syria, June 25 (AP).—Syria's new strong man, Col. Husni Zayim, was the only candidate for President today in this Arab state's national election.

Zayim, 50-year-old stocky and aggressive army commander, staged a bloodless coup d'etat March 30 and made himself Syria's military Premier. Then he called today's election. Other candidates had a chance to file but none did. Thus Zayim, is unopposed for the job of leading this ancient land of 3,400,000 people.

Syria has 762,000 males over 18 who are entitled to vote. All were asked to vote on the questions of whether a President should be elected, whether he should be entrusted with writing a new constitution, whether it should be ratified by referendum and who they wanted for President. The last question was easy.

Belgians Go To Polls Today

Brussels, June 25 (AP).—Belgians choose a new Parliament Sunday in a clash between friends and foes of King Leopold over his five-year exile.

For the first time in Belgian history, 2,930,270 women can vote, along with the 2,705,182 men. Only a few voters will stay away from the polls. Those who do may be fined 30 francs (about 75 cents).

Four major political parties are vying for the 212 seats in the Chamber of Deputies and the 175 in the Senate.

The biggest group, the pro-Leopold Social Christians, do not pledge a referendum on the touchy question. The Socialists, Communists and most Liberals oppose this.

Coplon Trial Verdict Due This Week; 4 More Witnesses Listed

Prosecutor John M. Kelley, jr., and screamed hysterically that "I was framed" and "this whole case is so fishy it smells to the high heavens."

In her anger, the defendant suggested that Valentin A. Gubitchev, the Russian engineer she says she once loved and who was arrested with her, may have been an FBI counterspy. She is accused of stealing Government secrets and relaying them to Gubitchev for transmission to Russia.

Kelley prodded the angry girl further about her relations with Harold Shapiro, the Justice Department lawyer with whom she has admitted spending several nights in hotel rooms and his apartment—discussing literature, she said.

Shapiro's name was brought into the case by the prosecution to refute Miss Coplon's story that she was in love with Gubitchev, and not his partner in a spy splot.

Kelley charged, and the defendant admitted after a heated argument, that she was spending nights with Shapiro at the time she claimed to be romancing Gubitchev.

Meanwhile, a report published here yesterday said that the name of Mrs. Edward U. Condon, wife of the director of the Federal Bureau of Standards, was brought into the Coplon trial through an error of the Justice Department.

A Justice Department spokesman said he did not know whether the reports were true or false. He said he "thought" they were "categorically wrong."

Archibald Palmer, Miss Coplon's lawyer, said "it's a damned lie."

The report was published in a column by Drew Pearson in The Washington Post.

Pearson said that the documents mentioning Mrs. Condon "had no relevance whatsoever, and were not in the files that the attorney general had read in advance."

"FBI explanation given to higher-ups is that the Condon papers got stuck in a paper clip behind another report," Pearson said.

Lucas Is Optimistic On Pay Bill Action

Senate Majority Leader Lucas (D., Ill.) yesterday held out the possibility of Senate action Monday on the House-passed $330 pay bill for District unclassified workers.

The Monday session has been set aside for taking up several bills on which a Senate vote must be taken before Thursday midnight, the end of the current fiscal year.

"There is a bare possibility," said Lucas, "that we might be able to squeeze in the District pay measure at this time."

The bill, granting pay raises to city police, firemen, teachers and per diem workers is retroactive to last July when all Federal employes won the same increase. It cleared the House and Senate District Committee a few days ago without opposition.

With Senate approval, the measure must go to conference for House agreement to a Senate-inserted technical amendment before its transmittal to the President.

A similar pay bill for District classified employes, also passed by the House, is expected to receive Senate Civil Service Committee backing at a 10 a. m. meeting Tuesday.

Funds to cover the two local pay measures—estimated at about 10 million dollars—will be included in a later supplemental appropriations bill after the enabling legislation is signed into law.

McMillan's Letter to Constituent . . .

DISTRICT COMMITTEE

AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE

House of Representatives, U. S.
EIGHTY-FIRST CONGRESS
Washington, D. C.

June 10, 1949

Your letter relative to the Government of the city of Washington was received this morning.

I would like to state that our forefathers designated a ten mile square plot of property as a seat and capitol of the United States. This property belongs to every citizen of the United States and I, as a Congressman, have no authority to delegate my legislative power to a municipal government.

The people of the United States have far too much invested in the Nation's Capitol to turn it over to a city or state government. All of the people from South Carolina, who reside in Washington, can vote in South Carolina, if they so desire. The city of Washington is the only city in the United States without a bonded debt and everyone knows it is the cleanest city in the world.

I do not know who your friends are in Washington, who desire Home Rule, as I have not had twelve letters from people in Washington in favor of Home Rule; and these, with the exception of two or three, were all people who had communistic tendencies and were interested in securing control of the Federal Government.

With kindest regards, I am

Respectfully yours,

John L. McMillan, M. C.

JLM:cwd

Red Tag Put On Home Rule

in favor of home rule; and these, with the exception of two or three, were all people who had communistic tendencies and were interested in securing control of the Federal Government.

"With kindest regards, I am
Respectfully yours,
(Signed)
JOHN L. McMILLAN, M. C."

A spokesman for the Washington Home Rule Committee said the citizen group had attempted to see McMillan to discuss the letter in advance of its release, but had not been granted an appointment.

The Home Rule Committee spokesman issued the following statement for the committee:

"We are making this letter public, so that the people of Washington will have first-hand knowledge of how Mr. McMillan apparently feels about their desire to govern themselves. We hope the residents of the District will prove to him at next week's public hearings that, while they dislike communism, they like democracy, and would like an opportunity to try democracy here in Washington.

"We hope that Mr. McMillan's mind is not closed on the subject of home rule. We hope he will carry out his public pledges that the Senate-passed Home Rule Bill will receive a fair and open-minded heading from his committee."

Informed that his letter had been released, McMillan told reporters that he was familiar with the background of the person who had written for his vjews on home rule, and "I didn't have much confidence in him."

"I knew the type he was, so I gave him just what he asked for," said McMillan.

"You mean your letter made the man unhappy?" a reporter asked.

"Well, no, I wouldn't say that," McMillan replied.

Chairman McMillan said that since the writer "was trying to get me to say something, I decided to give him a mouthful.

"I knew that the letter was prompted from some one in Washington, and felt certain it would get back here. It was a move to prod me on home rule from my own State," he said.

Asked about his assertion that many local home rule advocates who have approached him had "communistic tendencies," McMillan replied: "I know some that do."

"Do you think most home rule proponents do (had Communist leanings)? reporters asked.

"No, I wouldn't say 'most'," he answered.

McMillan conceded that the exchange of letters came under the heading of "politics" but that the contents of his letters "should not be taken lightly."

He said he could not remember refusing an appointment to a spokesman of the Home Rule Committee to discuss the suffrage issue before the letter's release.

The Home Rule Committee is a group of about 75 Washington residents, largely lawyers, businessmen and housewives. It was formed last year to help enact a local suffrage bill. Spokesman for the group has usually been Charles C. Glover 3d.

Earlier yesetrday, McMillan announced that he would meet with his Judiciary Subcommittee chairman, Oren Harris (D., Ark.), to consider the question of setting a hearing date for citizen witnesses.

McMillan also stated that he would confer with Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) about how long the hearings should run. McMillan said he favors making them "as brief as possible."

The Kefauver bill passed the Senate by voice vote on May 31.

The House District Committee's clerk, William McLeod, reported the following persons have asked to testify on home rule:

Louis Brownlow, former District Commissioner; William A. Roberts, former People's Counsel; Robert Faulkner, 940 Shoreham building; Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, District Federation of Women's Clubs; George L. P. Weaver, District (CIO) Industrial Union Council; Harry N. Peterson, District Librarian; Augusta S. Appointment Irks Gillette

By the United Press

Senator Guy M. Gillette (D., Iowa) served notice yesterday that he would fight President Truman's nomination of Carroll O. Switzer as Federal judge for the Southern District of Iowa.

Gillette asked Chairman Pat McCarran (D., Nev.) of the Senate Judiciary Committee for a hearing at which he can register his opposition to the appointment.

President Truman picked Switzer for the judgeship over the heated objections of Gillette, who had recommended two other candidates. The Iowan said he considers the appointment "a personal affront."

Gillette said in a letter to McCarran that Switzer does not have the "training, experience and professional background" for the post. Besides, he said, Mr. Truman picked him without consulting either of Iowa's U. S. Senators.

He suggested there was "some evidence of intentional, if not discourteous, bypassing of the constitutional rights and prerogatives of the United States Senate" in the President's action.

Gillette insisted in a separate statement that he has no personal objections to Switzer and regards him as "a man of high character, clean and honest."

He said Switzer had a "creditable" record as prosecuting attorney of Polk County, Iowa, and made a strong, although unsuccessful, campaign last fall as Democratic candidate for Governor

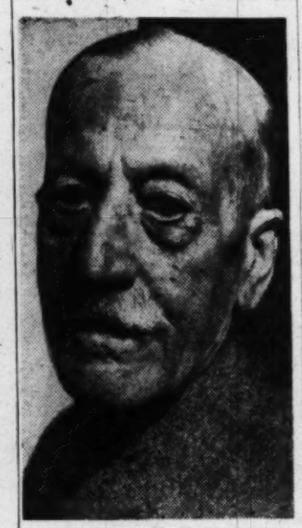
Plans to Paper

Keep Busy, Says Retiring Man at 81



The Washington Post
HARRY J. WELLS
He'll paper his house

Keep busy in your old age, advises 81-year-old Harry J. Wells, who observes that "too many guys just lay down and die."

Wells, deputy United States marshal here for 17 years, is retiring Thursday. One of the first items after his retirement, says Wells, is to paper his house at 411 3d st. nw.

Wells has lived in the vicinity of Municipal Court, where he handles prisoners, since he was 5 years old. He says that no one in his custody ever escaped, and estimates the number of his wards at 150,000.

Asked about his plans, Wells replied:

"I'm not going to stay idle. Too many guys just lay down and die when they retire, but not me. One of my plans is to paper my house."

He was a charter member of a paper hangers' union in his youth. Also, he worked in the painting trade. He has been a Mason for 27 years or more.

His condition, he says, is "chipper." He manages to get to work each morning between 6:30 and 7 to check in the prisoners.

On Monday, he is scheduled to escort two convicted men to the Federal Farm for Narcotics at Lexington. In his career, he has handled all kinds of criminals.

GOP Drops Walter Group

Salt Lake City, June 25 (AP).—The credentials committee of the National Young Republicans Federation last night reversed its former decision and voted to seat a delegation representating the Maryland Federation of Young Republicans. The vote was 16 to 4.

In the previous vote Thursday the committee had voted 13 to 6 in favor of the delegates representing the Young Republican League of Maryland, headed by John W. Walter of Baltimore.

Jeanne Fischer of St. Paul, Minn., vice chairman of the committee, said the committee reconsidered the previous vote on the motion of several committee members who had previously voted with the majority.

She said the committee last night voted for the change because it felt the Maryland federation "definitely has been the aggressive group while the Young Republican League has been more or less dormant."

She added that the Maryland federation, headed by Stanley Scheer, former Maryland State boxing commissioner, had not previously been chartered by the national organization. But she said the charter of the Young Republican League had expired with the start of this convention, thereby giving it no more legal standing than the Maryland federation.

Walter, Young Republican National Committee member from Maryland, said after the committee's decision was announced that a floor fight might be waged by his group.

Jewish Appeal Ends Thursday; $700,000 Needed

The Washington United Jewish Appeal campaign will conclude Thursday with a 7 p. m. supper for all workers at the Indian Spring Club, general chairman Joseph Cherner announced yesterday.

Approximately $700,000 of the $2,500,000 local goal remains to be raised, but 1949 collections and pledges are running ahead of last year, Cherner said.

The campaign will continue unofficially until the total is reached. UJA funds are raised to assist in resettlement of Displaced Persons, to reconstruct Jewish life in Europe, and to assist private projects in the state of Israel.

Use of GIs to Trap Prostitutes Charged

Seattle, June 25 (U.P.).—The Civil Rights Committee of the Seattle Bar Association today charged that police used servicemen to trap prostitutes.

Soldiers and sailors, a report charged, lured women into sexual acts for money, then turned them over to the police morals squad.

Dark Horse Is Elected Young Republican Chairman

Salt Lake City, June 25 (AP).—A "dark horse," John Tope, of Michigan, was elected national chairman of the Young Republicans today after a hot floor fight forced two ballots.

Tope, a 36-year-old Detroit business man, won by a count of 228 to 202 over Laughlin E. Waters, California legislator.

On a previous ballot Tope had defeated Waters by 222 to 208.

Joe Bartlett of West Virginia registered nine votes on each ballot.

Although Tope was declared officially elected by Gordon Allott of Colorado, chairman of the elections committee, on the first ballot, Waters' supporters challenged the result because they said Tope did not receive the 226 votes which had been announced previously as necessary for election.

Willkie Not Nominated

Philip Willkie, son of the late Wendell L. Willkie, who had been in the running previously, was not officially nominated and received no votes.

Tope won largely with the support of Eastern and Midwestern States. Waters, who has backed Gov. Earl Warren's legislative program in the California Legislature, had scattered support in all sections.

Tope is vice chairman of the Michigan Young Republican Federation and cochairman of that State's organization committee.

The new chairman, who replaces Ralph E. Becker of New York, retiring, is the father of three children.

Tope was the choice of the convention nominating committee.

Louise Replogle of Montana was nominated by the committee as cochairman.

In other action ouster of Ben Whitehurst of Washington, D. C., chairman of the speakers bureau of the Republican National Committee, was demanded. The resolution said Whitehurst had "improperly" injected himself into the affairs of the Young Republican Federation.

A convention official said Whitehurst had been accused of lobbying for the election of Waters as chairman of the young Republicans.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Of Importance to Every Gas User and Every Retail Merchant and Businessman of Metropolitan Washington by the Independent Merchandisers of Gas Heating and Other Gas Appliances

The independent gas appliance merchandisers of Washington sponsor gas as a satisfactory, trouble-free and economical fuel.

More than three hundred such dealers are devoting their energy and their private capital to the display demonstration and installation of the fine modern equipment now available for the use of gas. They invite you to call on them to see their displays. They are prepared to give sound and impartial advice and service on the selection and installation of equipment which will be most economical for you now and in the future.

These Washington independent businesses, however, are today confronted with what we honestly believe to be unfair competition which also directly affects the pocketbooks of every large and small gas user in the Metropolitan area.

The Washington Gas Light Company has announced its determination to commence a major, subsidized campaign in the merchandising of appliances in competition with the many independent merchants in the field.

We think this program of the Gas Company is so important we want everyone to understand clearly our controversy with the Company. Three weeks ago, in a public protest, we stated our belief the new policy of the Company involves unfair trade practices and unjust competition.

We also said that sale of appliances by the Gas Company forces gas users to pay heavy additional costs which are not fully disclosed.

We believe the following facts and figures, obtained from official reports of the Washington Gas Light Company filed with the Public Utilities Commission, prove our case:

In the year 1948, the Washington Gas Light Company alone, not including its Virginia and Maryland subsidiaries, spent $102,810.16 which was charged to operating expenses for advertising the sale of gas.

Other expenses attributed to sales promotion included supervision, $113,747.32; salaries and commissions, $116,952.67; demonstration, $32,155.24, and "miscellaneous sales expense", $72,687.84.

All of these charges were included in the operating expenses reported for the sale of gas. No part of them is supposed to apply to the Company's merchandising business.

The net sales reported by the Company in its competitive appliance business in 1947 were $842,249.61. And not one cent was charged against merchandising for advertising in that year.

In 1948 the Company reported net sales of appliances amounting to $517,666.51. But the Company allocated only $2,017.91 for advertising this competitive non-utility business.

Everyone knows what display space costs in modern buildings in downtown Washington, yet in 1948 the total amount allowed by the Gas Company for rental of its huge display space, warehousing, mechanical shops and all other space owned by it and used for competitive merchandising was only $8,100. All the rest of the cost went into gas bills collected from gas users, including those who couldn't afford to buy any of the very fine appliances they would like to have bought.

In the same year, 1948, the Gas Company charged as "operating expense" the sum of $800,688.80 for services on customers' premises. This was $85,767.55 more than the Company charged under this heading in 1947.

Some part of supervisory overhead costs, and other operating costs, amounting to more than $200,000 was spent for the same purpose in 1948.

All this was charged in the bills sent gas users—for gas, not appliances—although only a relative few received the service, and some part, at least, was certainly in connection with the promotion of gas company merchandising—at the expense of the gas user.

We believe this is not fair competition against the independent merchant who spends his own money on advertising and other costs of doing business, and cannot charge such costs against many who do not buy appliances.

SIGMUND Z. ENGEL
Meditates in cell

Chicago, June 25 (U.P.).—Mrs. Reseda Corrigan said tonight that Sigmund Engel, 73-year-old marrying swindler accused of defrauding her and scores of other women in the last 50 years, has repaid $5000 he had filched from her, and asked her to marry him.

The dapper Engel was trapped here yesterday, and is held on a warrant sworn out by the 39-year-old widow, who accused him of taking $8700 from her on a previous promise to marry.

"He wants to marry me next Monday," she said. "He said he would give me $250,000 if I did, but I know he's just no good."

Had Cash with Him

Mrs. Corrigan said Engel gave her the $5000 today in the office of his attorney. Engel was taken to the office under police escort.

Asked where Engel got the money to repay her, Mrs. Corrigan said he "had it on him," when he came in.

Assistant State's Attorney James A. Brown said the transaction was "perfectly legal." He added that "we would like very much to know where Engel keeps his money."

Mrs. Corrigan insisted Engel still owed her about $3300. He gave her $400 last night when she confronted him at a police station.

Boasts of Conquests

Engel boasted earlier today that he had bilked scores of women of millions of dollars and could "make King Solomon with all his wives look like a piker."

Engel is listed on police records as 73 years old, but says he is 80 "and good for 20 more years."

Police estimated he married 49 of his victims. He denied that, and said he couldn't remember how many women he had swindled.

"I got maybe five or six million dollars through the years," he said. Chicago police gave a more modest estimate of one or two million.

[In Los Angeles, Mrs. Corinne Perry, 64, told of being married to Engel this spring after a courtship in Washington during Inaugural Week, the Associated Press reported. She said they watched the Inaugural parade together and Engel took her to the Inaugural Ball.]

Costello Eyes Prince Georges

pointed out that he does not have a location where he could operate slot machines.

"You don't have to worry, we'll take care of that," he was told.

The Costello slot machine ring was charged by the California Crime Commission three months ago with spending 400 million dollars annually for bribery and corruption of public officials.

Costello, who is an important figure in Tammany Hall in New York, was referred to in the commission's report as "the lord of the underworld of the entire United States."

Recently, Collier's Magazine published an article which stated Costello in a single year personally collected 33 million dollars from the slot machine racket.

Maid Bound By Intruder

A gunman posing as a gas meter inspector bound a maid in the home of Samuel Kotz, 1752 Hobart st. nw., yesterday but apparently departed empty handed after ransacking the house.

The maid, Bernice E. Martin, 32, of 1736 Willard st. nw., was alone in the house when the man came to the door at about 11 a. m.

When he identified himself as a gas man, she led him to the basement. There, he drew a nickel-plated revolver, forced her into the furnace room and bound her hands and ankles with two-inch adhesive tape.

About an hour later, the maid tried to arise but fell on her face. Her groans were heard by a neighbor, Mrs. Blanche Wiest, of 1750 Hobart st., nw. Mrs. Wiest called her husband and he released the maid.

Kotz, a grocer, was summoned to his home and he notified police. Although the house had been ransacked, Kotz told police he could not find that anything had been taken.

The maid said the gunman was a white man, between 30 and 35, about 5 feet 9, 140 pounds, with black hair parted on the left side. He was wearing a gray suit, she said.

Boy Charged With Slaying

Jackson, Miss., June 25 (AP).—An 18-year-old high school boy was charged with murder today in the death of the father of a girl he says was sent away to break up a romance.

Ronald M. Pitts was charged with the fatal shooting of Perry W. Henderson, about 48, a vacuum cleaner company executive.

"I intend to marry Anna," police quoted the youth as telling Henderson.

Detective Chief A. P. Shipp said Pitts told him he went to Henderson's home late yesterday to "have it out" with him and carried a .38-caliber pistol "as a bluff." Not finding Henderson at home, Pitts searched the house for weapons. Finding only a shotgun, he carried it to the attic and settled down with magazines on a pillow to wait.

Shipp said when Henderson and a business associate reached the Henderson home about midnight, they found the telephone had been torn from the wall. While his friend went to phone police, Henderson investigated.

Pitts told Shipp his pistol discharged accidentally when he dropped it through the attic door while preparing to descend. Rogers said the youth told him Henderson shot at him once after telling him to stay in the attic until police arrived.

Russellville, Ala., June 25 (AP).—A rattlesnake forced radio station WWWR off the air for more than an hour today. Engineers found a 3-foot rattler had crawled into the tuning unit, shorting a circuit.

Two Men Held In Rape Case

Two men were held yesterday without bond in Municipal Court for hearing Monday on a charge of raping a 30-year-old Government clerk.

They are Beaman Heath, 24, 540 20th st. S., Arlington, and Oakley J. Powers, 29, 1723 G st. nw. Heath was described as a waiter in a diner and Powers as a Federal Trade Commission clerk.

The girl reported that she was assaulted in her apartment at 1601 Argonne pl. nw. She was in good condition last night at George Washington University Hospital.

She said she allowed the men to enter her apartment after having been on a blind date previously with one of them. After drinks were served, she said, each man attacked her while the other held her.

According to their attorney, Nathan M. Lubar, both men are disabled war veterans. He said that the hospital examination of the complainant showed a "suggestion" of force.

Judge Ellen K. Raedy refused to grant bail.

Burglar Who Enters Apartment Beaten Off

Alma Jackson, 27, awakened at 5:30 a. m. yesterday in her apartment at 1819 19th st. nw., to find a man beating her on the head with her shoe. Her screams routed the intruder.

Police said the man made no attempt at criminal assault or robbery. He apparently entered Miss Jackson's first floor apartment through a window from which the screen was removed.

Miss Jackson, a Government employe, was treated at Garfield Hospital for minor cuts and bruises on the head.

Police said she is the third woman attacked in three days in that area by apartment intruders.

All victims described the intruder as a light-skinned Negro, about 27, 5 feet 7 inches tall, slimly built and wearing brown trousers and brown hat. Yesterday he was said to be wearing a yellow sport shirt while the earlier victims said he wore a red sport shirt.

Third of Allegany Work Force Idle

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

(First of Two Articles)

Cumberland, Md., June 25. — More than 10,000 men and women, over a third of the working population, today are jobless in this Western Maryland county.

About 8000 of them are drawing unemployment benefit checks totaling more than $500,000 a month—the fourth biggest "payroll" today in Allegany County.

This unemployment "cushion" so far has saved Cumberland and the county from a major economic crisis. But the flow of checks will begin to taper off Labor Day, and what comes after that nobody here knows.

Major cause of the problem is the Celanese Corp. of America, whose plant on the outskirts of Cumberland a couple of years ago was employing more than 10,000 workers. Today there are 3600 on the job, and the prospects are for less work before there is more.

Cumberland has an outward air of prosperity and unconcern. The streets are full of well-dressed folk, business is making a profit, the banks are highly solvent and delinquent real estate taxes are virtually unheard of.

But a talk with people in various segments of the city's life shows both an undercurrent of concern and a feeling that something will turn up—probably from the State or Federal Government—to prevent disaster.

For example:

An unemployed Celanese worker: "I've got four kids and I'm buying my house. Today I'm drawing $20 a week relief and there just isn't any other work to be found. Somebody's damned well got to do something about it when the relief payments run out."

A leading business executive: "The State ought to extend the unemployment benefits beyond the present 26-week limit. Somebody on the State level ought to be down here making a survey of the situation and preparing to cope with it in the fall. So far, there have been too many politicians sounding off."

An official of the Textile Workers Union of America (CIO), bargaining agent for the Celanese workers: "We don't hear many gripes, but some members are asking what's going to happen. Most are just waiting to see. The union now is trying to get a public works program started here to help out by providing new jobs. We need a big housing project, for example."

A leading bank president: "The country and this community like it have been on a postwar spree. Now we're getting back to normal and it will be best for us in the end. The community is basically sound, our banks have lent conservatively on homes and businesses.

"I don't expect any general foreclosures on GI home loans, for example. Up to two weeks ago we were still opening new savings accounts and our deposits were exceeding withdrawals. There are over three million dollars worth of war savings bonds of the E class outstanding in the community, too, and we're selling them today at about the same rate as the redemptions. Of course there is a drive on now."

The chamber of commerce, said its manager, Harold Smith, feels a large number of the unemployed can sustain themselves on pick-up jobs and back-yard gardens. Smith stated:

"It's tough but no more so than anywhere else where textiles are a major industry."

35,000 to 95,000 in County

The county, wedged into the narrowest part of Maryland between Pennsylvania and West Virginia, has a population today variously estimated at from 85,000 to 95,000. About 43,000 of this total live in Cumberland. The working population is estimated at about 28,000 by Patrick J. Carroll, manager of the Maryland State Employment Service office here.

The trading and business area, which spreads into the adjoining States, is isolated from other major communities. This is it impossible for an unemployed worker here to commute to any other industrial center even if he could find a job there.

The biggest employers in Allegany County are Celanese, the Kelly-Springfield Tire Co. and the two railroads, the Baltimore & Ohio and the Western Maryland. The tire firm is working steadily, but the rail lines are bedeviled by John L. Lewis' frequent coal strikes. The one now on the horizon will bring more layoffs for rail workers.

This is the Celanese story, as explained by H. C. Givens, jr., the trim executive who heads the Cumberland plant.

Textiles for some time now have been going through a postwar deflation. There are some signs the turn may come before long. That affects the entire corporation, one of the Nation's biggest rayon manufacturers.

This particular plant was the original one, established back in World War I days. It is not as modern as some of the corporation's newer plants, but it must compete with the others. Even if the textile industry as a whole begins to pick up, it probably won't result in more employment here until other Celanese plants have expanded their job rolls.

Further furloughs are imminent at Cumberland because of overproduction and high inventory, Givens put prospects this way:

"I'd say they are pretty dim—not black, but gray."

He said a major problem is to increase the plant's efficiency, a project that will call for union "cooperation."

Givens pointed out that Celanese has paid out since January 1 some $218,000 in dismissal pay to workers considered laid off for good because of technological changes. Yet this group is not more than 10 per cent of the whole number of Celanese workers now out of jobs.

This dismissal money, plus accumulated savings, has helped to soften the blow of unemployment. But the fact is that $500,000 a month now being paid out in unemployment benefits is something less than half the amount the jobless used to receive when they were on industrial payrolls.

To take half a million dollars a month out of the economic stream of a community this size is tough. The figure is not all-inclusive either, for there are about 2000 other unemployed, half of them cut off payrolls in the past few months but not now drawing unemployment relief. The other 1000 jobless are the recent high school graduates now tossed into an already saturated labor market.

You don't see the unemployed standing around in big groups. They live in widely scattered parts of town. But they do come together in groups of sometimes more than 1000 a day to call for their unemployment checks.

There they talk together about their problems and kid each other.

"See you at the plant at 8 a. m."

"I'd like to take a couple months vacation. I'm just getting used to this.'

But you don't get the impression anyone is very happy about living off an unemployment check—or that a family can pay the grocer and the landlord for the $25 a week most families are drawing.

B & O Will Furlough 1100 Clerical Workers

Baltimore, June 25 (U.P.).—The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad announced today that it will furlough 20 per cent of its clerical employes at the end of this month because of a decline in traffic and a substantial decrease in revenue.

The company said the cutback would affect approximately 1100 employes, 250 of them in Baltimore, the remaining 850 scattered among cities along the B. & O. lines. The furloughs become effective at the close of business Thursday.

A company spokesman said he doubted if more than 10 to 20 persons would be affected in Washington. Only Brunswick and Cumberland, Md., on the Washington run would be affected to any extent, he said.

Bandits Kill Guard, Wound 2d in Holdup

Chicago, June 25 (U.P.).—Three bandits shot and killed an armed guard and critically wounded another today in a holdup that netted them very little cash.

The gunmen killed Bruno Kosiol and wounded Joseph Den, both employes of the Brink Express Co., in taking three packets of checks and cash they carried.

Rabbis Approve Lilienthal's Job, Back Civil Rights

Bretton Woods, N. H., June 25 (AP).—Leading Jewish rabbis of the Nation declared today that control of atomic energy "is a great public trust owned by the American people and it should be administered by them."

The sixtieth convention of the Central Conference of American Rabbis recorded their approval of the administration of the Atomic Energy Commission under Chairman David Lilienthal and added:

"(Atomic energy) is not a military preserve; it is not a monopoly to be exploited by great private interests."

The conference also urged full adoption of President Truman's civil rights program.

Under criticism were Senate filibusters. The conference called upon President Truman to "meet the issue of filibuster head-on by holding the Senate in continuous session, if necessary, until the measures which have the support of the majority become law."

formed operator source who declined to be quoted by name said that "there is something to the proposal."

Operators who left here yesterday for the weekend presumably were back home sounding out sentiment on a three-day work week.

They have scheduled meetings at various points. The big one will be held Monday at Pittsburgh. It will be organized by George H. Love, head of the big Pittsburgh Consolidation Coal Co.

Lewis has three different negotiations going on at the same time among soft coal operators. The hard coal contract talks begin in Philadelphia July 7. The big controversy is in the bituminous industry, however.

Two major conferences are being held here. One is with the northern and western operators, plus steel companies having their own—or "captive"—mines.

The other is with the United States Steel Corp.

A third conference, with the Southern Coal Producers Association, has been in progress in Bluefield, W. Va., since May 25.

Lewis wants to keep up separate negotiations with United States Steel. He hopes to put on extra pressure because of the demand for steel and because of the particulary important part United States Steel plays in any contract bargaining in the coal or steel industry.

This year, United States Steel is just as worried about the contract crisis with Philip Murray's CIO United Steel Workers as it is with Lewis. Thus it is in the middle of a bitter rivalry between the two giant labor leaders determined to get a better contract than the other.

D. C. Policeman Hurt By Waitress After Her Arrest

Police Pvt. Melvin F. Wesley was admitted to Emergency Hospital last night suffering from injuries that other officers said were inflicted by a waitress he arrested.

The officers said that Fleta Vining, 31, 807 10th st. nw., reported for work at 7 p. m., drunk, at a tavern near 9th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw. and was ejected from the place by her employer.

Wesley heard her screaming, police said, and placed her under arrest. She clawed and kicked him, they said, injuring him in the groin. She was booked on charges of being drunk and disorderly and assaulting an officer. She was held at the Women's Bureau. Wesley, who is 37, lives at 2025 Fendall st. ne.

Morgan Mansion Goes to City for $5233 in Tax Sale

Glen Cove, N. Y., June 25 (AP). The 57-room mansion of the late J. P. Morgan, once assessed at more than one million dollars, was bid in by the city of Glen Cove for the $5233 in taxes due on it at a tax sale today.

The 39-year-old building had become a white elephant in recent years.

A real estate firm bought the 76-acre island on which the mansion stands and sold several lots on which homes have since been built. But the big house is covered by a zoning regulation that requires it be sold only as a one-family residence. It has 23 baths.

For a time the mansion was rented to Russian personnel at the United Nations.

A wrecking firm said the house was built so solidly it would have to be blasted to rubble with little salvage.

The city is expected to seek a change in zoning regulations and convert East Beach, which is included in the mansion property, into a public recreation place.

Denham Is 'Biased' Against Labor, AFL Leader Says

Lake Placid, N. Y., June 25 (AP).—The president of the building and construction trades department of the AFL said today that Robert N. Denham, general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, was "biased against labor."

Richard L. Gray also contended that Denham was "unfair in his administration of the Taft-Hartley law."

Gray addressed the midyear meeting of the Building Industry Employers of New York State.

Gray did not elaborate other than to say Denham helped write the Taft-Hartley Act and now "pretends he is merely administering a law given to him by Congress." He did not specify the provisions suggested by Denham.

Informed of Gray's remarks, Denham told a reporter that in late 1946 Senator Donnell (R., Mo.) had asked him to submit suggestions on how the Wagner Act could be improved. Denham added that before Donnell received the suggestions, the Senate committee had practically completed drafting the Taft-Hartley Act.

Gallatin Prints, Paintings Given To Art Gallery

A collection of prints, which will be placed on exhibit today, and of paintings has been bequeathed to the National Gallery of Art, it was announced yesterday.

The bequest comes from the late R. Horace Gallatin of New York, said David E. Finley, director of the National Gallery, 5th st and Constitution ave. nw.

Finley, who described the gift as "important," said the paintings would be placed on exhibit at a later date. The paintings include work by Corot, J. F. Millet, Diaz, Harpignies, Rousseau and others.

Finley said the prints represented "40 years of discriminating collecting," and works of Durer, Rembrandt and Meryon are "all represented by superb examples in the Gallatin bequest."

Mr. Gallatin was the great-grandson of Albert Gallatin, Secretary of the Treasury from 1802 to 1814, and also of Elbridge Gerry, a signer of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution.

wall to level the floor of his edifice. The spot the emperor chose was so wet that excavators of the last 10 years had to build special drainage facilities to make possible their explorations, Nicolosi said.

It was discovered that the many-ton 95-foot-high bronze canopy over the Pope's private altar was resting on the already badly cracked dome of an ancient Roman tomb. Antonio Canova's 127-year-old statue of Pius VI also was found resting on a crumbling ancient tomb.

In the ancient Roman cemetery, dozens of old tombs of the pagan and early Christian eras were found two stories below the floor of the present basilica. The tombs were lined up beside an ancient Roman road which wound up the slopes of the Vatican hill.

The work will remain for history as a "brilliant gem" of the pontificate of Pius XII, Nicolosi commented.

Excavating began soon after the death of Piux XI in 1939. In trying to find a place for the tomb of that pontiff in the basement of St. Peter's, members of the Vatican staff found signs of ancient construction which aroused the interest of the present Pope. The work which began then will be going on at least through next year, Nicolosi said.

A Marine officer who was wounded in Okinawa yesterday married the Navy nurse who nursed him back to health.

lives and characters the principles taught by Jesus Christ.

Elder George Vandeman, associate secretary of the Ministerial Association, general conference, told the morning session of the young people's division, that the majority of today's youth are callous to right living.

"Behind every church there is a list of young people who refuse to live right. There is no excuse for immorality," he said. "Youths will have to abandon their habits of drinking, smoking and immorality," he declared. "The only method of saving youth of the world from their lust is the world of God and Christ in life," he said.

The general services of yesterday's camp meeting were attended by 4500 members from churches in the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia. Those who couldn't be seated in the Sligo Church, with a capacity of 3000, were seated on the lawn of the Washington Missionary College campus, where they heard the programs over loud speakers.

At an early morning devotion, Dr. Benjamin G. Wilkinson, president emeritus of the Washington Missionary College, spoke against proposed calendar legislation.

"Unless the American public awakens to the serious danger inherent in the proposed calendar legislation," he said, "the United States will face a world of confusion. Many groups of well-meaning people are putting on great pressure to change our present calendar in such a way that the continuity of the week will be destroyed. They believe they are logical."

Experiences Described

Last night's session heard of the experiences of Elder Henry F. Brown, traveling secretary of the General Conference, on his 28,000-mile trip through Africa.

"Primitive, heathen teachings are succumbing to Christian civilization in the African interior," he said. Adventists are winning to Christianity and its civilization 10,000 natives a year, he said. Within 25 years civilization will have penetrated into every heretofore untouched section of Africa, he predicted.

Two young ministers were ordained in the gospel ministry yesterday afternoon at a special service. One, Robert F. Correia, is now workng in the Potomac Conference at Covington, Va., and the other, P. H. Werner, interned in Dutch East Africa, is a missionary. Scheduled to speak today at the Sligo Church, Flower and Carroll aves., are Elder Archa O. Dart, educational secretary, Potomac Conference; Elder A. E. Lickey, denominational pastor from Atlanta, Ga.; Elder E. F. Koch, pastor of the Richmond Church; Dr. Benjamin G. Wilkinson and Elder George Vandeman.

Artist Reports Wife Shot Self After a 'Spat'

South Harpswell, Me., June 25 (AP).—The young wife of a noted Maine artist was near death today after her husband said she shot herself following a "spat" over doing the dishes in their automatic washer.

Deputy Sheriff Norman Emerson said Mrs. Stephen Etnier shot herself with a .22-caliber pistol.

Shortly before, the deputy said, Mrs. Etnier and her husband had entertained the poet, Robert P. Tristram Coffin, at dinner.

Brunswick Hospital reported the young wife's condition "serious." She is the former Jane Walden Pierce of Georgetown, Ohio, an airlines hostess before her marriage, last September, to the 45-year-old painter of marine canvases.

Strike Talks Avail Little In Hawaii

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

Honolulu, June 25 (U.P.).—Labor and management made no notable progress toward settlement of the crippling Hawaiian dock strike in renewed talks last night, but they agreed to meet again Monday. Some observers thought the strike might end early next week.

The meeting last night was the first since negotiations deadlocked five weeks ago. Management spokesmen said it had brought no change—the CIO longshoremen's union still sought a 32-cent-an-hour raise, and management was still refusing to arbitrate.

Refuse to Renew Offer

Union spokesmen said they had offered to compromise on wages, but that representatives of the seven stevedoring companies involved had refused to renew the 12-cent-an-hour raise previously rejected by labor.

Both sides expressed hope for a "goodwill" agreement, and it was believed they would try hard to settle the strike themselves before Gov. Ingram Stainback's fact finding board reports Wednesday.

Neither side referred today to management's previous charges of "Communist influence" in the union—claims which may delay Honolulu's becoming a State.

Life Made Difficult

Life in Honolulu has been made difficult but not desperate by the strike, which has paralyzed the waterfront for 57 days. Hawaii residents were amused by reports that mainlanders are planning to send food parcels to friends and relatives here.

Prices are zooming, due to air freight costs, and business has been hard hit by the strike, but people in Honolulu can still buy as much food as their income will permit.

The most serious blow has been curtailment of business activities, which has forced a dozen larger companies to slash wages 20 per cent and other firms to lay off 2500 workers in addition to the 1700 striking stevedores.

Wage Demands Made Upon Chrysler Corp.

Detroit, June 25 (AP).—The CIO United Auto Workers served wage demands today on Chrysler Corp.

Chrysler, which employs an estimated 75,000 production workers, was the second major auto firm to get the demands. Negotiations on a new contract have been going on with Ford Motor Co. since June 2.

The union declined to disclose what it was asking of Chrysler.

It was believed the demands would follow the UAW pattern for 1949. Major goals are a $100 monthly pension for workers who retire at the age of 65 after 25 years service, a health and welfare plan, and an indefinite wage increase.

11 Trees Felled At Washington Traffic Circle

Eleven trees on or near Washington Circle nw. have been cut down by District government workmen to make way for expansion of the circle's traffic capacity.

The Whitehurst Freeway, scheduled to open July 1, will feed an increased volume of traffic into the circle, and corners of several streets will be rounded to speed movement of vehicles, according to Sam R. Harrison, deputy director of highways.

In about 10 days curbs will be set back, and construction of channelization islands will be started. The circle itself is unaffected.

Four red oaks in front of George Washington University Hospital will be cut down this week, according to James R. Latham of the Trees and Parking Department.

$5,600,000 Spent By GSI in Year

Government Services, Inc., which operates cafeterias and other facilities on Government property, spends $5,600,000 for supplies and equipment each year in the District and immediate vicinity.

This statement was made yesterday by R. R. Ayers, general manager of the organization, who said that more than 96 per cent of all food and supplies used are bought from local merchants. In addition, the payroll for the 2100 GSI employes is $4,200,000 a year.

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

The Administration's labor bill, nominally repealing the Taft-Hartley Act, Monday will enter a crucial week of Senate voting.

A series of three roll call votes Tuesday, in fact, may determine whether there will be a new labor act.

Prolabor Senators said privately that if they are defeated in these key votes they may consider seriously a motion to send the bill back to committee. This would be tantamount to shelving the bill for the session.

Democrats Hopeful

Administration forces, working together for the first time as a unit to kill use of Taft-Hartley injunctions in national emergency strikes, were not counting on losing, however.

More hopeful than they have been at any time since Democrats splintered on labor bill strategy, they predicted one or two votes either way will tell the story.

"We'll either win or scare the heck out of them," said one Administration lieutenant.

The way was cleared for the test votes by a unanimous-consent agreement to dispose of the national emergency section of the bill by midafternoon Tuesday.

The first test will come at 1 p. m. Tuesday on a Taft-supported answer to the Administration's latest challenge.

Three Votes on Tuesday

Introduced by Senators Holland (D., Fla.), Hoey (D., N. C.), Bricker (R., Ohio) and Schoeppel (R., Kans.), it returns to Taft-Hartley fundamentals, but authorizes 60-day injunctions, but not plant seizues, in national emergency strikes.

Then at 2 p. m. Tuesday the Senate will vote on the Administration's best chance to hold pro-labor Senators together—the anti-injunction amendment of Senate Majority Leader Lucas (Ill.).

This would strike out the Taft substitute provision for use of injunctions in critical strikes, but would allow Taft provisions for Government seizure of struck plants to stand.

Finally, at 3 p. m. Tuesday a vote will be taken on the substitute offered by Senator Taft (R., Ohio) for the Administration's bill. This combines use of the injunction with seizure authority in national emergency strikes.

Veto Called Certain

If the Lucas motion wins, Taft's national emergency proposals would be stripped down to authority to seize struck plants. Administration forces would hail it as a decisive victory, even though injunctions (by implication) still might be applied in a Government-seized plant.

But if the Lucas maneuver fails, there is almost certain to be a motion from the Senate's extreme New Deal wing to send the bill back to committee for burial.

Advocates of this course say the Administration then would be free to rally labor again in 1950 in another campaign for complete repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The other alternative would be to send the bill, carrying injunction and other modified Taft-Hartley features to the House and eventually to the President for an almost certain veto.

Although the end result might be the same—continuation of the Taft-Hartley Act in full force—some campaign-minded Democrats argue that recommittal would accomplish as much without putting Mr. Truman on a hot spot.

Although many another controversial Taft-Hartley point remains to be debated by the Senate—notably the so-called States' rights closed-shop issue—the injunction fight has been so dramatized by the Lucas move it now is generally regarded as the labor bill's turning point.

Senate talk of last-resort recommittal of the bill, however, doesn't take the House into reckoning. The House already has gone through the recommittal stage.

Now, House leaders are confidently predicting a bill will be brought out of the House Labor Committee for another go-round, regardless of what the Senate does.

Modern 'Hansel and Gretel'

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

"DADDY LEFT US HERE," said Peggy Frazier, 5, when she and her brother, Donald, jr., were found on a lonely island in the Seneca River, near Syracuse, Friday night. They were deserted there Thursday, police said

2 Tots Wander Deserted Isle For 2 Days

Syracuse, N. Y., June 25 (U.P.).—Donald Frazier was arrested today in a comfortable house only 3 miles from a deserted mile-long island covered with brush on which he had left his two small children to wander alone in terror like Fairyland's Hansel and Gretel.

Little Peggy, 5, and Donald, 3, didn't find any gingerbread houses to munch on, authorities said, but for two days they thought they saw spooks and witches behind every bush.

Their only refuge was a dilapidated shack. Their only food was a snapping turtle, a raw, beheaded sunfish and three unskinned boiled potatoes.

Keith Wickes, who with his wife rescued the hungry, exhausted children, said they were covered with insect bites and sunburn from their wanderings over the seldom-visited island in the Seneca River 16 miles northwest of Syracuse.

Frazier abandoned the children sometime Thursday, Deputy Sheriff John Bond said. They were rescued last night by the Wickes, who were fishing near the island.

Sergt. Arthur Willis said Frazier, a 30-year-old Navy veteran, and his wife quarreled "over money matters" Monday. He said Frazier left their Port Jervis home in a huff and went to Binghamton, N. Y., where he picked up the children at the home of their maternal grandmother, Mrs. Rita Kenworthy.

Willis said Frazier did not worry about the children being alone and thought they would be safe on the island. Frazier returned to the island an hour after the children were rescued and was "worried some" when he couldn't find them, Willis said.

Willis said the Fraziers have another son, about 3 months old.

No charge was placed against Frazier.

AFL and CIO Placed Behind Geneva Group

Geneva, June 25 (AP).—Two top American labor leaders today threw the combined strength of the AFL and CIO behind the new anti-Communist world labor organization being formed here.

This coincided with a meeting in Milan of the executive bureau of the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions (WFTU), from which the anti-Communist unionists have broken.

In Geneva the men forming the new organization were told by George Meany, secretary-treasurer of the AFL:

"For us there is no turning back to the past which is finished and done with."

James Carey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO, told the union leaders "What we accomplish here today and tomorrow will be compared in the eyes of free men the world over with what transpires in Milan next week, when the minions of the so-called World Federation of Trade Unions lock step into the meeting of that organization. I am not afraid of that judgment."

Representatives from 36 Nations plan to set up a provisional committee whose job it will be to call a constitutional conference probably late this year. A name for the new organization has not been selected.

U.S. Unit Organized For Old Age Study

United States Health Service has set up a special Division of Chronic Disease to coordinate existing programs of research into aging processes, it was disclosed yesterday.

Formation of the new division, whose major functions were previously handled by the agency's Division of States Relations, was revealed in announcement of a general reshuffling of the USPHS organizational setup.

The changes were approved by the agency's surgeon general, Dr. Leonard A. Scheele, to keep pace administratively with rapid developments in the concepts of public health and current advances in public health practice, it was stated.

Concentration on Geriatrics

Dr. Scheele long has advocated that more stress be given medical research into chronic diseases of old age. What work was being done in geriatrics, heretofore, was being handled individually in various divisions of the Public Health Service. The new division now pulls all these projects into one administrative unit.

The new structural plan brings together in the Bureau of State Services the Federal-State and interstate programs of USPHS. Activities of this bureau are carried on in three branches, Environmental Health Service, Personal Health Services, and Administrative and Staff Services.

Four Units Combined

The Environmental Health Service Branch is composed of the Divisions of Sanitary Engineering, Industrial Hygiene, Water Pollution Control, and the Environmental Health Center at Cincinnati.

Personal Health Services Branch takes in the new Division of Chronic Disease, Dental Public Health, Tuberculosis Control, Venereal Disease and the Communicable Disease Center at Atlanta.

Public Health Service as reorganized, regroups the activities of the service within the framework of the four previously existing bureaus, including the Bureau of State Services. The others are Office of the Surgeon General, Bureau of Medical Services and the National Institutes of Health.

The consolidations, made over a period of many months, were effected after a year of study by a special committee on organization, headed by W. Palmer Dearing, Deputy Surgeon General.

Dinner Tuesday

D. C. Dentists To Honor Dr. Thorn

Dr. Doran S. Thorn, who taught about half of all the dentists now practicing in Washington, will be honored by District dentists in testimonial dinner Tuesday evening.

Dr. Thorn

Occasion is his retirement from practice after more than 30 years as a dentist and dental educator here.

In 1941, when Dr. Thorn resigned his professorship at Georgetown University Dental School, it was said he had taught 400 of the 696 dentists then practicing in Washington. The number now on record of the District of Columbia Board of Dental Examiners in 805.

1918 Georgetown Graduate

A graduate of Georgetown in 1918 with highest class honors, Dr. Thorn combined dental practice with teaching at the university until 1930. He then devoted full time as professor of operative dentistry and superintendent of clinics at Georgetown until 1941, when he returned to active practice.

He was born on January 7, 1894, in Jamaica, British West Indies, and worked in a dentist's office there to learn laboratory work of the profession. He used this skill later to earn his early education and to finance his way through dental school.

In 1944, Dr. Thorn was appointed to the D. C. Board of Dental Examiners for a five-year term. He served as board president in 1946-47, and has been its secretary-treasurer since April, 1948.

Cancer Clinic At Gallinger Closes July 1

The District's only free cancer detection clinic, now located at Gallinger Hospital, will be closed July 1, Health Officer George C. Ruhland said last night.

The clinic will be reopened at the Georgetown Health Center, 3246 P st. nw., later this year when funds become available for payment of nurses, he added.

Dr. Ruhland said he has no nurses available for present assignment to the clinic and has no funds to hire additional ones. Last week he met with Budget Officer Walter L. Fowler to discuss use of funds earmarked for personnel positions now unfilled.

The health officer said he would require $13,250 to employ five nurses a year for the clinic and it would take several months for sufficient funds to accumulate through the vacancies to reach this total.

Clinic physicians are paid by United States Public Health Service, but the nurses are on the District payroll.

YMCA Pools To Get Permits This Week

Swimming pool licenses will be issued this week to the Young Men's Christian Association, 1736 G st. nw., William H. Cary, jr., director, Bureau of Public Health Engineering, said yesterday.

Cary said the organization has filed applications for licenses on its two pools and has accompanied these with a schedule of changes and repairs to be made. These have been checked and found satisfactory, he added.

Among the changes will be the supplementing of present filter and pump capacity, elimination of cross-connections, improvements in the flow meter, changes in inlets and outlets of pools.

The pools' management was ordered to obtain licenses by Assistant Corporation Counsel Clark F. King after Superintendent of Licenses Chatham T. Nottingham inquired why they did not have them.

Britons Map Strategy for Doctor Strike

Harrogate, England, June 25 (U.P.).—The British Medical Association today mapped strategy for a possible "general strike" of doctors against the government's socialized health program.

The convention here voted yesterday to prepare for a "mass withdrawal" from the plan in protest against pay and conditions, but rejected several motions urging that the walkout start immediately.

Delegates were especially bitter about the government's refusal to arbitrate disputes with the association, and about incidents when the health ministry had overridden local doctors' committees.

Dr. Guy Dain, BMA chairman, said that "if we cannot attain complete freedom to take our case to arbitration, we shall be compelled to come out of the service."

YES! that's why 100,202 buyers switched to Hudson
America's "4-most" car

YES—and here's the proof! Latest reports show that Hudson sales so far this year are 38% over the same period last year.

YES—and here's further proof! Hudson owners traditionally buy Hudson again and again. But this vast sales increase is accounted for by the 100,202 owners of other makes—many of them the highest-priced cars—who have switched to Hudson.*

Could there be any finer proof that the New Hudson, with its exclusive "step-down" design, is the new measure of motor-car value . . . so advanced in design it's a protected investment for your motor-car dollars!

Not just "more" roomy, but the most seating room, leg room to spare. The most efficient use of interior space in any mass-produced car; in fact, amazing head room. You enjoy the most comfort, as you ride ahead of rear wheels, within the base frame, down where riding is most smooth and most relaxing.

3 MOST Road-worthy
Not just "more", but most road-worthy! Only Hudson, with its exclusive "step-down" design and recessed floor, achieves a new, lower center of gravity—lowest in any stock car. Result: the safest, steadiest hug-the-road ride ever known! And to all this, Hudson adds the advantages of unit body-and-frame construction.

4 MOST All-round Performance
Your choice of the high-compression Hudson Super-Six engine, America's most powerful Six, or the even more powerful Super-Eight. Center-Point Steering for easiest handling. Triple-Safe Brakes for utmost safety. Many more high-performance, low-upkeep features only Hudson combines in one great car.

Strike Negotiators Here Take Recess

No negotiations were scheduled over the weekend in Washington's three current strikes, involving AFL carpenters, laborers and pie salesmen-truck drivers.

Also apparently dormant for the weekend were three other local disputes, all involving transportation companies, two of which contain danger of later strike action These involve new labor contracts for employes of Capital Transit Co. and A. B. & W. Transit Co.

Spokesmen for the carpenters and laborers, who have been on strike more than three weeks against office building and apartment house contractors, have asserted that some 85 per cent of the 3500 carpenters and 40 per cent of the 3500 laborers involved would be at work at higher wages by next week.

The carpenters have been asking an increase from $2.40 an hour to $2.50, while the laborers have demanded $1.50 instead of $1.35 an hour.

Some 100 pie drivers, also out more than three weeks, are still holding out for a 10 cents an hour increase from the four major pie companies here. About 200 bakers also are idle because of the dispute.

Capital Transit management and union leaders marked time, pending a meeting scheduled for 2 p. m. Monday, in trying to agree on arbitration procedures in their dispute. They are deadlocked over terms of a new contract. The present one expires Thursday night.

Representatives of the Arnold bus lines and its operators and maintenance men, who have agreed on a 5-cent-an-hour increase, but differ over fringe issues, will meet at 9 a. m. Friday for a second series of negotiations. A union spokesman said yesterday there is a good chance of settlement at that time.

By Reserve Board

New Bank Holding Bill Likely Soon

NYHT News Service

The Federal Reserve Board expects to send to Congress shortly a revised bill to regulate bank holding companies. Already late in the session, any delay now will be due to the board's voluntary action in submitting the draft to the Budget Bureau. This was done so as not to pass up any chance of getting indorsement by the Treasury and other Government banking agencies before the bill goes to Capitol Hill.

The Treasury, the Comptroller of the Currency and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. have been cold to the proposition in the past, feeling that it treads on their prerogatives.

The bill's big target is the Transamerica Corp., the West Coast banking giant that has been the pet hate of Marriner S. Eccles, demoted chairman of the Reserve Board. The board's unanimous action in reviving the holding company bill so soon after the death of Amadeo P. Giannini, late chairman of Transamerica, probably is coincidental.

No chance is seen for enactment this session. Senate and House Banking Committees will at least get a look at it, however, and if Congress is late in adjourning, one of them may give it a push.

Having started the ball rolling in Congress again, the Reserve Board expects to wind up presentation of its intitrust case against Transamerica shortly after hearings resume July 5. Transamerica then will put in its defense against charges of violating the Clayton act by banking stock purchases. The holding company's defense will be closely watched for any indication that Mr. Giannini's death has influenced its fight-to-finish attitude.

Trade Conditions Worsened in June, Purchasers Say

New York, June 25 (AP).—Business conditions grew worse in June instead of showing an expected seasonal recovery, in the opinion of industrial purchasing executives.

The business survey committee of the National Association of Purchasing Agents said in its latest report today the over-all business picture for the current month continued the down trend.

Moreover, the report said, July is expected to show a further decline and August may continue the downward trend.

During June, the survey committee said, production slumped under May figures, backlogs of orders again sagged, commodity prices went into a more general decline, purchased inventories diminished and an increasing number of industrial buyers shifted to a "hand-to-mouth to 30-day" commitment range.

One bright spot appeared, however. The committee said the leveling off of business might reach a point where improvement "could show up in the fall."

In support of this forecast, the survey committee said, buyers point to accelerated inventory reduction. Forty-nine per cent of the buyers questioned said their inventory turnover rate was higher this month than in January; 27 per cent reported it was holding steady and only 24 per cent reported a lower rate.

Of the buyers surveyed, 69 per cent said they were resorting to a short term buying policy. This compared with 62 per cent in May.

Deere Income Gains In First Six Months

Moline, Ill., June 25 (AP).—Earned income of Deere & Co. and its subsidiaries increased $6,775,732 during the six-month period ending April 30, over 1948, President Charles Deere Wiman said today. The report indicated a leveling off in sales with the statement that:

"The more normal balance between supply and demand for farm equipment is more evident today than in the first quarter of this fiscal year."

Maryland Tobacco

Baltimore, June 25 (AP).—Average prices for the majority of grades of leaf auctioned on southern Maryland tobacco markets this week were higher than those of the week before.

The Department of Agriculture and the State Department of Markets reported that most increases amounted to $1 to $2 per 100 pounds. A few grades showed declines of about the same amount.

Net sales for the week—seventh of the auction season—totaled 2,615,846 pounds for an average of $56.33 per hundredweight. The average was $1.41 higher than the revised figure of the previous week and the highest of the season.

The general quality of the tobacco also improved. Proportions of good and better grades increased, and there were fewer low quality offerings. Most sales were made up of good and fair thin crop, low to good heavy crop, fair seconds and fair tips.

Revised season net auction sales to date total 18,434,506 pounds for an average price of $53.39 per hundredweight. The auction markets have sold about 1,500,000 more pounds than in the corresponding period of 1948.

Season receipts of the Maryland Tobacco Cooperative, under the Government loan program, amount to 2,208,212 pounds, or about 12 per cent of the crop auctioned so far.

Combined season net receipts of the hogshead and auction markets total 20,674,506 pounds.

Auction bid averages per hundred pounds on some representative grades, and change from last week follow:

Heavy crop—Fine cherry red, $68, down $1; good cherry red, $67, up $1; fair cherry red, $63, up $2; fair greenish, $46, up $2; fair red, $41, unchanged; low cherry red, $50, up $1; low red, $29, up $1.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, June 25 (AP).—Wheat tumbled sharply in the closing minutes on the Board of Trade today, dragging the rest of the market down with it. Losses ran to nearly 4 cents with July wheat off the most.

Some longs who have been buying wheat over the past few weeks suddenly decided to sell in the last 15 minutes of dealings, apparently wishing to get out of the market over the weekend. When they unloaded, they found few bids under the market.

Wheat closed 1½ to 3⅞ lower, corn was 1⅛ to 1⅝ lower, oats were ⅜ to ¾ lower, rye was 2 to 2¼ lower, soybeans were ½ to 1 cent lower and lard was 3 to 8 cents lower, 100 lbs. down.

The sudden collapse of wheat wiped out a good part of the gains scored earlier this week. But prices still were around 1 to 4 cents higher than last week's close, the distant March contract showing the biggest gain while July had the smallest.

At the opening, wheat started out on a burst of buying from accumulated overnight orders.

Main reason for the selling was an Agricultural Department survey of wheat conditions, definitely repudiating private crop reports of extensive deterioration to wheat in the Southwest. The department said there was "much confusion" about the extent of stem-rust damage, and then added its own survey indicated little damage.

Buses Gain, Car Mileage Here Drops

By S. Oliver Goodman

Capital Transit Co., which last year operated more bus miles than car miles for the first time in its history, is widening the margin this year.

In its latest report for May, the transit system reported 2,332,180 bus miles for an increase of 25 per cent over the same 1948 month. At the same time, street car miles totaled 1,416,543 for a drop of 22 per cent.

For the first five months, bus miles totaled 10,045,696 for a gain of 7.7 per cent. Car miles dropped 8.4 per cent to 8,160,416.

The trend toward bus service in lieu of cars is emphasized by these figures. In 1947, Capital Transit operated over 24,441,145 car miles as compared with 23,942,753 bus miles. In 1948, car miles totaled 21,110,981 against 22,338,693 bus miles.

Despite a continued dwindling in passenger traffic, Capital Transit Co. net income in May and the first five months this year showed substantial gains over the same 1948 periods.

Net last month amounted to $130,746, an increase of $44,363. Five-month income totaled $440,527, a gain of 32 per cent.

Operating revenues of $12,021,804 for the first five months were 6.5 per cent ahead of the same period last year. Operating expenses of $9,451,061 were 7.1 per cent heavier. Taxes and depreciation held virtually unchanged.

Revenue passengers for the first five months aggregated 132,993,065, a decline of 9.6 per cent.

MAY AREA SALES: Sales of six Washington department stores in May showed an increase of 1 per cent over May 1948, Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported yesterday, and in the first five months of 1949 were 3 per cent ahead. Sales in 94 stores in the Fifth Federal Reserve District were 2 per cent and 1 per cent off in the month and the five months, respectively. Sales in 15 Maryland stores were 5 per cent lower for both periods and in 20 Virginia stores were 1 per cent off in the month and 2 per cent in the five months.

THIRD TRIP: When Washington Suburban Sanitary District, Md., offers $2,500,000 in water and sewer bonds on July 6, it will mark the district's third trip to the financing market in 1949. Just after the start of the year, it marketed two million dollars worth of bonds at a net interest cost of 2.928 per cent. That issue was followed in April by an offering of two million dollars more in bonds, sold at a net interest cost of 2.9341 per cent. Giving effect to next month's offering, the district will have outstanding more than 47 million dollars in bonds. This is equal to about 16 per cent of assessed values of taxable property in its territory which covers most of the District of Columbia suburban area in Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties.

CREDIT: The National Credit Association, at its recent conference in Boston, adopted a resolution asking a Federal law permitting garnishment of Federal workers' salaries when it is not possible to collect their accounts through regular channels. Another resolution condemned "advertising of unsound credit items in an effort to build sales."

ODD LOTS: Auto plants in the United States and Canada will set a 20-year high in monthly output for June, turning out an estimated 628,300 vehicles. Ward's Automotive Reports predicted . . . American Airlines carried 313,681 passengers on its domestic routes in May, first time a single airline ever carried more than 300,000 domestic revenue passengers in one month . . . Bank loans dropped 17 million dollars in Chicago and New York for week ended June 22, the twenty-third straight week of a decline . . . Southern Pacific has placed orders for 67 Diesel locomotives at a cost of 23 million dollars.

Public Building Gains 19% Over '48

New York, June 25 (AP).—Public building contracts awarded in the eastern states were running 19 per cent ahead of last year at the end of May, while private work was 20 per cent under the volume in the 1948 period, F. W. Dodge Corp. reported today.

The fact-finding organization for the building industry reported:

Public-account work of all descriptions in the 37 states east of the Rocky Mountains had a contract valuation in the period from January through May of $1,380,812,000. A year ago in the same months it was $1,160,560,000. Private account work contracts declined from $2,671,047,000 in the first five month to $2,141,188,000.

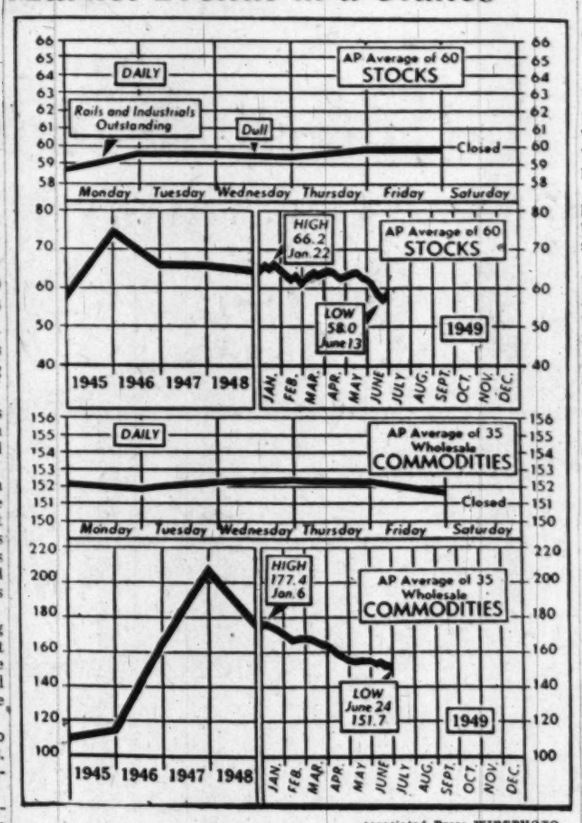
Market Trends at a Glance



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

THE WEEK IN REVIEW—After five straight weeks of decline, the Associated Press average of 60 stocks rose sharply last week to 59.9 from 58.7 at the end of the preceding week. The gain was the largest since March, although transactions were the smallest since September. Led by industrials and textiles, the Commodity Index reached the lowest level since October 14, 1946. It closed the week at 151.7 against 152.1 a week previously

All-Time Record Auto Output Thought Possible This Week

Detroit, June 25. (U.P.)—The beaver-busy auto industry may set an all-time production record next week.

All major and most minor producers have been shoving production schedules up to where they may break the boom year all-time weekly record set in April of 1929.

Since the end of the Ford Motor Co. strike weekly output has been jumping ahead at the rate of about 5000 cars and trucks. If the trend continues, the industry can celebrate the Fourth of July with a record-popping production week.

If the weekly record of 152,000 cars is not matched next week, it undoubtedly will come the second or third week in July. After that there is little chance, as another Ford strike after July 15 is looked for and a walkout in the steel industry is threatening.

Last week's production was estimated at 143,415 cars and trucks, which may run the June total to the highest in history except for two months—April and May—in 1929.

Despite serious setbacks, production during the first six months of this year is expected to top 3,149,713 vehicles in both the United States and Canada. The only other similar period when more cars and trucks were made was in 1929.

The two added up to a walkout after July 15, cutting off Ford's weekly 25,000 unit production for a big dent in the industry's put-out.

New Lincoln Cars Due This Week

Detroit, June 25 (AP).—New Lincoln and Lincoln Cosmopolitan cars equipped with hydra-matic transmission will go on display next week.

Benson Ford, general manager of Ford's Lincoln-Mercury division, said the new models include a number of important engineering changes.

The hydra-matic equipment, which eliminates the clutch pedal in shifting gears, will cost extra. It is offered as factory-installed optional equipment.

Engineering changes, Ford said, include newly designed fans and fan belts, flywheels of steel plate instead of cast iron, changes in the crankshaft, and the use of new rubber engine mounts.

Bill Would Give Average Classified Worker $125.24 Raise

The average classified Federal worker would get a salary boost of $125.24 a year in the pay-reclassification bill that has the support of the Long subcommittee of the Senate Civil Service Committee. The increases would range from a minimum of $6.48 to a high of $670 a year. The percentage increase in all grades would be 3.6.

Opposition of employe groups prevented the bill from speeding through the committee last week. At one point several Senators supporting the bill were ready to kill it through inaction because of the rough handling they got from employe spokesmen.

Several union protests were based on misinformation. Now, however, most employes are convinced they will be lucky if the bill is enacted.

The measure would merge the present 15 CAF, eight Professional and eight Subprofessional grades into a new General Service schedule of 12 grades. In addition, there would be several new top-bracket grades for top-notch employes.

The following tables show how the salaries of the 800,000 classified employes would be adjusted under the bill. Proposed General Service grades are used:

Four new grades have been proposed by the Administration in order to raise the ceiling on classified salaries from $10,330 to $16,000. The subcommittee is inclined to add two grades and raise the ceiling to $14,000.

The average salary of the 105,000 employed in the Crafts, Protective and Custodial Service (CPC) would be raised $108.16 a year, or 4.2 per cent under the bill. The following table compares present with proposed rates:

D. C. Listing Deficiency Items for Senate Bill

Total of $450,000 May Be Increased After Bell School, Fish Market Action

District budget officials are preparing a bill covering about $450,000 in deficiencies for inclusion by the Senate in the pending third deficiency bill or as a fourth and final deficiency measure.

The $450,000 total may be boosted after the Commissioners act on a proposal to insert an item of $225,000 to build an addition to the Bell Vocational School. This was cut from the District appropriation bill on Friday before it went to the White House.

Another item which may be added is $12,000 to $15,000 to repair damage to the Municipal Fish Market, Maine ave. between 11th and 12th sts. sw. A four-alarm blaze on Wednesday caused serious damage to the structure's second floor.

To Confer This Week

The Commissioners will confer with the Board of Education on the Bell School proposal this week.

Present items earmarked for the deficiency list include about $100,000 for payments to private hospitals of Washington for care of indigents during the fiscal year ending June 1948. About half of this is for treatments given by Emergency Hospital.

Another $100,000 item is for the city's day care program which was extended by Congress this week for another year. The largest amount is $130,000 for payment to the Federal Government to cover the District's share of operation of the District Court and United States Court of Appeals for the fiscal year ending June, 1948.

Other Items Listed

Smaller items include $30,000 for added expenses in operations of the 19 buildings operated by Superintendent of Buildings H. O. Akers. The rise was caused by increased cost of steam and electricity.

A $40,000 listing is for a refund to a District firm as a result of erroneous collection of a tax. Another $23,000 is for care of District patients at St. Elizabeths Hospital.

Last week Congress enacted the second deficiency bill. The third bill totaling 127 million dollars has been passed by the House and is now before the Senate.

Fay, Judges Disagree on Theft Bill

United States Attorney George Morris Fay and the District Court judges disagree as to the merits of a House measure to change the statutes concerning thefts here, it was learned yesetrday.

The bill, introduced by Representative Joseph P. O'Hara (R., Minn.) would make thefts of less than $200 a misdemeanor, petty larceny, and those of more than that grand larceny, a felony. The present law separates the two crimes at $50.

After a general term meeting last week, the judges disclosed they approved the O'Hara bill and had suggested that police be given the same power of arrest in petty larceny cases as in felony cases. That would give police the power to arrest on reasonable grounds indicating that any theft has been committed.

Fay Changes Stand

Fay told a reporter that originally he had been in favor of upping petty larceny to $200 in order to reduce the caseload in Municipal Court, where misdemeanors are tried.

But on further study and consultation with his associate prosecutors, Fay disclosed, he has turned against the bill.

"This is a serious problem, jumping the differentiation point four times what it was. While it is recognized that there has been a serious increase in the cost of articles in the 27 years or so that the present statute has been on the books, the cost has not jumped that amount," Fay said.

Police Power Question

He declined to name a suitable figure but said that $100 would be more comparable to the prevailing figure.

As to the proposal to give police wider powers of arrest in petty larceny cases, Fay said he still is studying the problem. He says he is seeking authority in law for such a proposal. He said powers of this kind have been allowed in misdemeanors where contraband articles such as guns are concerned, but did not know the latitude allowed in petty larcenies generally.

The judges and Fay had been asked by the Corporation Counsel's office to examine the bill.

Falls Church Residents Baffled by Annexation

By Henry Rohland—The Washington Post

Kerns and grandson, Roy Minnick, 14, inspect some of their 50 dairy cows on Mrs. Kerns' farm in the annexation strip, off Annandale rd. in Fairfax County. Widowed two years ago, she now runs the farm with help of a manager

By Donald Oleson
Post Reporter

The young-looking, wavy-haired man looked up from the new sedan he was washing . . .

"It's about 50-50 with me," he said. "I don't know too much about this annexation business . . ."

Behind him was his neat, small brick home.

To all points of the compass around him, row on row of nearly identical small houses radiated, their roofs making a regular pattern against the hot summer sky.

Walter Johnson, owner of the neat home at 111 Lawrence dr., lives in the Fenwick Park development, which is in Fairfax County.

He and nearly 12,000 others are living in a "no man's land" strip, about six square miles in area, which surrounds the City of Falls Church like a giant "C."

Falls Church hopes to file a court suit next month to take the strip from Fairfax County through annexation. Fairfax has promised to fight when the suit comes to Fairfax Circuit Court.

His Views Typical of Many

Johnson is a milk route salesman. He's married, has two boys aged 3 and 12 years. In a way, he and his views on annexation are typical of many residents in the "no man's land."

Johnson looks at it this way, "Sure annexation's got its disadvantages. Maybe it's going to mean higher taxes."

His eye traveled to the ruts in the street in front of him. "But if we get better roads and maybe a lower water rate out of it," he added, "it's worth it."

And he added quickly: "But I just don't know the answers."

If you follow the annexation question into the homes and business places in the C-shaped strip, you hear a lot of answers like that.

Take Mrs. John W. Kerns, who owns a dairy farm in the annexation belt about a mile and a half—as the crow flies—from Johnson's house.

The Kerns farm, 87 acres of it, lies off Annadale rd., not too far from bustling Lee blvd.

"We Don't Need the City"

As far as Mrs. Kerns is concerned, annexation is going to mean more taxes.

"And what for?" she asks. "We don't need a sewer, we have our own water and we have bottled gas. We don't need the city."

Thirty-six years ago, she and her late husband bought the rolling acres and its farmhouse, set in lindens, maples and walnut trees. They built a modern barn for their 50 dairy cattle.

Two years ago, Mr. Kerns died. His widow runs the farm now with the help of a manager.

Said Mrs. Kerns, squinting at the distant rows of tiny houses: "If we'd known the area would come to this, we'd quit dairying and not built the barn."

If you leave the Kerns farm, travel down Annandale rd. until it becomes Shreve st. and nearly touches the Falls Church City limits, you're in a small Negro community.

Chances are Mrs. Susie Allen will be sewing or reading in her rocker on the front porch of her house at 409 Shreve st.

Mrs. Allen is an invalid, her bones still knitting slowly from a broken and rebroken hip. She, too, is afraid annexation of her home for 40 years will mean extra taxes.

"I owe $500 to the hospital," she says, "and I want to fix the place up. I just couldn't pay the extra taxes."

She admits she "wouldn't object much to it." She thinks "it would make things better for us"—better water (the Allens have a pump) and better sewage (they have a septic tank). But "I just can't see my way to it."

When you pose your annexation question to businessmen in the C-shaped strip, you get the same variety of answers.

Elliot Citron owns the Jefferson Village pharmacy, 612 Lee blvd.

He came from New England several years ago because he believed "Falls Church is an area with a tremendous potential."

He feels "you can't stop progress—this area can't stay a part of the county forever. It's going to grow and keep on growing."

For Plan Despite Taxes

"Even if I stood to lose something financially (higher taxes) from annexation, I don't think I'd stand in the way of it."

Travel up Lee blvd. about a mile and you come to the Hillwood Motor Co. at Seven Corners. Owner Julius Pruss dispenses cars, service, and gas to the streams of motorists who commute daily to and from Washington.

And he thinks Falls Church "can't possibly do anything for us." He says he already has a good location, on a good State highway. And he's afraid of the Falls Church business license tax, which has no duplicate in Fairfax County.

Fairfax has what it calls a "merchants capital tax" with a levy of 50 cents on every $100 of a merchant's stock on hand as of January 1 of each year. In Falls Church, merchants pay $25 for the first $3000 gross receipts, 10 cents on each $100 thereafter.

Tax Comparisons Vary

Taking those strictly local taxes into account, a filling station with $250,000 annual gross receipts and with an inventory of about $5000 (both figures based on an actual case) would:

1. Pay a $272 yearly license tax to Falls Church, and

2. Pay a merchants capital tax of $25 to Fairfax.

But in another example, a sample habadashery store with a much higher inventory would pay $72 to the city for its license, $100 yearly to Fairfax on its inventory.

The annexation strip has its small homes and its luxurious ones.

Down Sleepy Hollow rd. from Seven Corners, you come on one of the area's most expensive developments, Ravenwood, and the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Barta at 615 Juniper lane—a low, natural stone ranch type house.

Barta is against annexation. "The city hasn't enough money to take care of its own streets without taking in more," he believes. Barta is secretary-treasurer of a Washington group which represents the drug trade associations. He also is interested in Fairfax County Republican doings.

His wife, Ruth, agrees. "If we could get street lights and better police protection," she thinks, "we wouldn't mind paying the taxes. But it would be years before we got those things."

People inside of Falls Church proper have differing views on annexation, too.

Real Estate Man A. W. Greene leaned on the handle of his lawnmower in front of his office-home at 333 N. Washington st. the other day and mopped his forehead.

"I don't mind paying for something if it's going to benefit everybody," he said. He thinks better development of the area after annexation would "attract new business, and that helps me."

But in his home at the western end of town, 713 Poplar drive, E. T. Rowland, an Army civilian engineer, was opposed to it. "I don't see any immediate prospect of it benefiting me," he said. "All I see are increased taxes."

Citizen Units Survey Matter

Citizens associations in the border strip are in the process of making up their own minds on annexation, Harold A. Ward, past president of the Federation of Fairfax Citizens Associations, said.

The association and some of its component groups are making committee surveys of the benefits and losses from annexation, Ward pointed out.

Thomas K. McGarry, a Navy Department engineer and president of the Jefferson Village-City Park Citizens Association, thinks a majority of the members of that group are "open minded on the subject." They're "waiting to be sold."

Owners Hit As Real Foes Of D. C. Slum Clearance

Profit-Seekers Are Content to See No Changes Made, McCarran Says

Senator Pat McCarran (D., Nev.) last night blasted profit-seeking slum owners as the real backstage opponents of a functioning District slum-clearance program.

The author of the District Redevelopment Act of 1946—yet to receive its first appropriation—said:

"I do not know where all the opposition is, but I strongly suspect it is down under the surface.

"Making So Much Profit"

"It comes from people who are making so much profit out of their slum propreties that they are just as happy if nothing is ever done to clean them up," he said.

McCarran issued his statement directly after the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Independent Offices agreed to defer to the full committee the Senator's request for an immediate $20,000,000 slum-clearance outlay.

Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.), subcommittee chairman, explained his group wanted to give McCarran a chance to present his case personally to the full Appropriations Committee. O'Mahoney has strongly supported the move to implement District slum clearance program now.

Marshall Heights Project

Besides McCarran's demands for the $20,000,000 authorized by the act, the committee has before it the House-rejected $2,180,000 request to start work on the Marshall Heights redevelopment project in Southwest Washington.

"I am very grateful that the subcommittee saw fit not to reject the item, and to lay it before the full committee," McCarran said. "I welcome the opportunity to discuss the whole slum-clearance issue with my committee colleagues."

He said the present procedure of asking specific appropriations for specific projects is a "device that lends itself particularly well to those who don't want to see any money appropriated to slum clearance in the District."

The Senator added he was "most hopeful" of full Senate committee approval of his position.

He emphasized again that the Slum Act requires that all appropriations go into a revolving fund, which would mean little actual loss to the Government over the 10-year life of fund authorization.

The Senate Appropriations Committee is expected to meet early this week to mark up the Independent Offices supply bill, at which time McCarran will present his case.

The House only last week turned down the Marshall Heights item and is expected to take the same hostile view toward this new Senate move to provide local slum funds.

On Monday the House may consider an alternative method of financing District slum clearance and public housing. The pending national housing measure contains two amendments to permit local participation in both fields.

Representative John Phillips (R., Calif.) has served notice that he "or someone else" will fight any attempt to give Washington the same coverage under the bill as all other jurisdictions would have.

Pound Chief, Dr. Ruhland Renew War

Round two of the running battle between the District poundmaster and the Health Officer opened yesterday with each throwing punches.

Poundmaster Frank B. Marks, foe of vivisection, and George C. Ruhland, Health Officer, advocate of a pending bill for turning unclaimed dogs over for use in medical research, entered the new encounter on a quarrel over dog licenses.

Marks has asked Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West whether medical schools and laboratories should be required to purchase $3 dog licenses on the 500 animals they handle each year.

When Dr. Ruhland was informed of this he countered with a query on whether the poundmaster furnishes immunization certificates with each unclaimed dog he now sells showing the animal has received an antirabies injection. Such certificates are required on all sales of dogs, Dr. Ruhland said.

Then he added, half-facetiously, "Does Marks obtain licenses for all the dogs in his custody? It seems to me he is living in a glass house and cannot afford to throw stones."

The previous round ended 10 days ago when the District Commissioners vetoed a recommendation by Dr. Ruhland that a veterinarian be employed as poundmaster. Marks is not a veterinarian.

The Commissioners have also decided to report unfavorably on a bill introduced by Representative Auchincloss (R., N. J.) to permit humane societies to take over the pound. The city heads feel the present operation is satisfactory and the revenue comes in handy.

20 Families Are Waterless; Bills Unpaid

More than 20 families, with approximately 25 children, residents of Pierce ct. nw., have been without water and sanitary facilities since Thursday, it was disclosed yesterday. The place is between New Jersey ave. and 1st st., near L st.

Raymond B. Ward, water registrar, said a meter at 1101 and 1103 Pierce Court was cut off because bills have not been paid for "three or four months." He said he was not aware so many families apparently are dependent on one meter.

Miss Emily Milburn, assistant director of Settlement House, said her institution is supplying drinking water and also baths for the children, but can do nothing about the waterless toilet facilities. She said the property recently was taken over by the District for a school expansion and an agent who formerly paid bills no longer does so.

Ward said that occupants of the address where the meter is listed were notified of the delinquent water bill so they would have a chance to pay it themselves before service was discontinued, but that no payment was made.

Miss Milburn said she will attempt to get money to pay the bill

D. C. Pool Closed When 50 Negroes Try to Enter

The Government-owned Anacostia swimming pool closed for several hours yesetrday afternoon when 50 Negro children attempted to get in.

The five pool lifeguards told Kermit Stewart, pool manager, that they might not be able to handle the situation if a disturbance broke out in the pool, and asked to be relieved. Stewart closed the pool at 2 p. m., an hour after it opened. Normally the pool would have remained open until 6 p. m., reopening at night from 7 to 9:30 p. m.

After a meeting with GSI General Manager Robert Ayers and Supervisor of Park Activities R. J. McCarthy, at which it was decided to add two more lifeguards, the five guards who asked to be relieved agreed to go back to work. The pool reopened for its regular evening session.

This Plumber Forgot, Left Fingerprints

Fingerprints on a toilet bowl resulted yesterday in the arrest of Granville E. Duffin, 26, of Rockville, Md., who was charged with assault, robbery and housebreaking.

Police said Duffin admitted robberies of two women this week. On Thursday, they said, he slugged, choked and robbed Mrs. Eulalia Colwell, of 1416 R st. nw., after impersonating a plumber to enter her apartment.

The following day, according to police, Duffiln followed Mrs. Louis P. Lavery, wife of a Veterans Administration lawyer, into her apartment, at 2651 16th st. nw., and robbed her of $16 and a wrist watch after threatening her with an ice pick.

Police said Duffin played his role of plumber too well in the Thursday robbery, so that they were able to match fingerprints on the toilet with a set in the police files.

Duffin was picked up yesterday afternoon by Detective Sergt. L. B. Furr in the 1900 block of 14th st. nw. Two years ago Furr arrested Duffin in another case, which resulted in conviction for housebreaking.

Duffin will be arraigned in Municipal Court Monday.

Judges to Meet On School Post Appointments

The judges of District Court are scheduled to meet Monday to consider the appointment of three persons to the Board of Education here.

The appointments are to fill vacancies caused by the expiring terms of George E. C. Hayes, Adelbert W. Lee and Mrs. Edward C. Magdeburger.

The reappointment of Lee and Mrs. Magdeburger has been opposed by the Federation of Civic Associations.

Lee's reappointment was opposed by the federation in a statement saying it was unable to recall that Lee had ever supported any of the federation's policies.

Lee said he could not comment yesterday because of his position as an appointee of the District Court, other than to say his record was clear and would speak for itself.

Mrs. Magdeburger was assailed for a joke about Negroes that she told recently at Anacostia High School.

She described the protests against the joke as "ridiculous."

Area News in Brief

Many Gifts Made To Public Schools

Scores of gifts, ranging from a 600-volume library to a baseball trophy, from a seesaw to a public address system, were made to District public schools during the semester which just closed.

The gifts came from parent-teacher associations, kindergarten mothers' clubs, home and school associations, citizens' associations and other groups, as well as from individuals, according to a report made by School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning to the Board of Education.

Books and money to buy books made the largest category of presents. Phonographs and records, movie equipment, adding and mimeograph machines, raincoats for patrol boys and sports equipment were among the largest items. The largest cash gift was $750 for decorating the teachers' room at the Murch School.

Among other items were linoleum for small children's rooms, a cyclorama curtain for a stage, arc spotlights, money for purchase of a wire recorder and an oil painting.

Hormone for Beans

Do your snap beans look low when they bend down? Have your bean blossoms drooped or dropped?

What they need is a little manliness in this savage heat, according to the University of Maryland's vegetable specialist, Edward K. Bender.

A hormone, known as CLPA, according to Bender, will retard the dropping and drooping common in hot weather to snap beans—and human beings. Mixed with 75 per cent rotenone-pyrax dust, the hormone increases the yield of snap beans by 17 per cent in any weather.

But CLPA is not for lima beans, Bender warns. Like mortals, the lima just sits back and takes it.

After 24 Years

Old-Timer Slated for Police Trial

Pvt. Franklin Gue, 47, a Metropolitan policeman for 24 years, will face a police trial board on charges of failing to report for duty in the central cellblock at headquarters, it was announced yesterday.

Trial date is contingent upon completion of an investigation, officials said.

Gue was suspended Friday night after Lieut. David McCutcheon of No. 1 Precinct said he found the policeman intoxicated at home about two hours after he was supposed to report at 4 p. m.

Gue's superiors said the officer telephoned shortly after his appointed duty time, and asked emergency leave, which was refused. McCutcheon went to his home, 1415 Girard st. nw., to investigate.

Officials said that Gue explained he was suffering from diabetes, and that drinking relieved his pain. Gue is attached to No. 1 Precinct station, and assigned to the central cellblock.

Records show that Gue had faced disciplinary action 11 times in the past, while being commended 9 times for efficient police work.

He was suspended in December, 1947, for insubordination in refusing "to do routine police work." On another occasion he drew an eight-month suspension after an inquiry about association with persons of questionable character. When Gue was restored to duty, he was paid for the period of suspension.

In October, 1947, he was fined $125 for failure to patrol his beat.

The community's citizens turned out to celebrate completion of the road way, one of the paved streets replacing the mud which almost isolated the community

Fined in False Report

Richard Fullard, 35, of 600 U st. nw., was fined $10 yesterday for making a false report to police.

According to the Municipal Court charges, he reported that he had been stabbed by a stranger earlier this week. Investigation disclosed that he had been cut during an altercation with a woman. He testified that he made the report because he he didn't want her arrested.

Victory Over Mud Observed By Community

A veterans' development celebrated a community victory yesterday when paved streets were dedicated where a year ago a child almost drowned in flooded 4-foot ruts.

For Carole Highlands, a group of 250 homes east of the 7000 block of New Hampshire ave. extended, near Takoma Park, it was the end of a two-year struggle for improvements.

Isolated by Mud

In the summer of 1947, new $11,000 houses were all but isolated through a sea of mud, cut off from mail, medical and food services. Home owners organized a citizens association, and carried their fight to the Prince Georges County Commissioners, thence to the State Legislature before funds for improvement were made available.

Yesterday, enthusiastic throngs fought for souvenir pieces of red tape after County Commissioner John H. Beall snipped the ribbon and opened the community's paved highway system.

Four-year-old Ronnie Michaels of Carole Highlands drove the first car over the new roads, a 1949 foot-powered low-slung roadster. County police chief Maj. Ralph W. Brown, on hand for the ceremonies, immediately stopped him for driving without a permit.

500 Attend Ceremonies

More than 500 persons attended the gala ceremonies which included street dancing, free hot dogs, ice cream and beer, group singing and speeches. Spencer Marlow, president of the citizens' association, presided.

Al Litowsky of Carole Highlands received a special award for bravery from Chief Brown. Litowsky knocked little Ricky Shulman from the path of a car which had slipped its brakes recently, and was descending unmanned on the boy.

Citizens first ran into trouble when improvement of their roads, approved by the county commissioners, was rejected when it was found funds were lacking. The veterans took their problem to the Legislature, and the first law enacted this term was an authorization for the county to increase its bonded indebtedness to alleviate the Carole Highland situation. Residents called it "Operation Mudhole."

Meridian Hill Park Theater Opens Tonight

A sellout is promised for the opening tonight of Washington's new outdoor Meridian Hill Park Theater.

The theater, which returns live drama to the Nation's Capital after a 10-month absence, will open with Elisabeth Bergner in "Amphitryon 38."

Tonight's performance starts at 8:40. It will be the first time Jean Giraudoux's play written in French especially for Miss Bergner, has been given in English. She played the French- and German-language versions into a Continental hit.

Of 930 chair-seats available in front of the especially-designed stage in the park at 16th st. and Florida ave. nw., all but a handful had been sold as of last night.

Winston O'Keefe, managing director of the Washington Theater Festival, as the series is called, said all $1.80 and $2.40 seats for opening night had been sold, out for several days, and as of late yesterday fewer than a dozen $4.80 and only a few $3.60 seats remained.

"Amphitryon 38" will be performed each night through July 9. It will be succeeded by the Broadway triumph, "The Importance of Being Earnest."

Tickets may be obtained during weekdays at the National Pipe Shop, next to the National Theater, on E st. nw., or after 1 p. m. Sundays at a box office in the park.

A District Court jury awarded $10,000 damages Friday night to Robert Johnson, 54, 4330 Foote st. ne., for injuries he received in a streetcar collision here in September, 1947.

Through his attorney, Frank J. Kelly, Johnson claimed that he has suffered a permanent chronic back strain which interferes with his work as a building contractor.

The defendant, Capital Transit Co., introduced motion pictures of a man they identified as Johnson sawing wood and contended that he has fully recovered from any injuries he may have incurred. Johnson, however, denied that he was the man in the pictures.

4 'Smoke-Jumpers' To Give Show Here

U. S. Forest Service

READY!—Glenn Smith, jumper, wears the experimental outfit used by aerial fire fighters in trial demonstrations. Forest fire fighters will jump and land on the Ellipse

Men from Mars? No. They're the United States Forest Service's "smoke-jumpers" those airborne fire fighters who nip forest fires in the bud.

The parachuting daredevils, who usually work in pairs, can reach a remote fire, spotted by Forest Service lookouts within 15 minutes, and stamp it out long before it destroys valuable timber of menaces life and property.

Four of the Forest Service's 300 smoke-jumpers arrive here by air yesterday from Missoula, Mont., headquarters, as part of the Agriculture Department's drive emphasizing forest-fire prevention in view of the present dry spell.

Clad in their bump-preventing padded canvas suits and combination football helmet-catcher's masks, they'll put on a special show for the Capital at noon on Tuesday, parachuting from a plane onto Washington's Ellipse, behind the White House.

After a greeting by Commissioner John Russell Young and the Marine Corps Band, they will move on to a National Press Club "Salute to Business" luncheon, attended by Agriculture Department officials. There they will present awards to seven of the Nation's top business leaders, representing businessmen who have contributed over 25 million dollars in forest-firev-prevention advertising.

These aerial firemen, mostly college forestry students in their 20s, jump from an average of 1200 feet, often to 50-foot square clearings. Special parachutes, designed with drawstring-operated slits in the silk, enable them to guide themselves to pinpoint landings, according to Clint Davis, director of Forest Fire Prevention.

The favorite landing method is the "feather bed." The smoke-jumper catches his chute in the trees 50 to 75 feet above ground, lowers himself earthward with 100 feet of coiled rope he carries zipped in one legging.

Once on the ground he sheds his padded suit, goes to work in jeans and shirt to build a fire break with axes, saws and other equipment dropped by plane.

When he's finished, the smoke-jumper legs it back 15 to 40 miles through heavy woods to the nearest cleared landing strip thatscan accommodate a plane to pick him up.

$60,000 Fire Hits Waldorf Supply House

Fire destroyed the building of the Waldorf Supply Co., at Waldorf, Md., last night, with estimated loss of $60,000. Two firemen were overcome by smoke and heat, and one suffered a cut hand.

The building contained all types of building supplies, hardware and paint.

Eugene Goddard, the owner, left the place at 7 p. m. A few moments later the flames were discovered. He and Chief Charles M. Levering, of the La Plata Fire Department, first company to arrive at the scene, were unable to determine the cause of the fire. Levering said the entire building was ablaze.

The loss estimate was made by Mitchell Cochrane, manager.

For a time, the flames menaced the plant of the Parlett Gas Co., which contained a number of tanks of highly explosive gas. Firemen prevented the flames from spreading.

The men overcome were Frank Abell, 37, Mechanicsville, and Joseph Baker, 15, son of Fire Chief Richard Baker of District Heights. Everett Rice, 50, of the Mechanicsville department, suffered the hand cut. They were treated by the District Heights and Oxon Hill rescue squads.

Fifteen fire companies from surrounding communities fought vainly to check the blaze. A crowd of 2000 persons watched.

Women Urge No Sex Favor

The District League of Women Voters told the Attorney General yesterday it oppose discrimination in favor of a woman in filling the judgeship of Juvenile Court.

In a letter to Attorney General Tom C. Clark, and a copy to the President, the league asked only that the best qualified person be appointed.

The league emphasized that it believes juvenile delinquency should be handled in accordance with modern concept, and said the court should be primarily a social agency.

"We believe selection should not be limited to residents of the District of Columbia. Although preference should be given to a qualified District resident, we do not believe that this should preclude choice of a non-District person whose training and qualifications would make for a better judge.

"We also ask no discrimination in favor of a woman, for our chief interest is in securing the best qualified person irregardless of sex or residence to serve as judge of the Juvenile Court," the letter states.

Montgomery Zone Hearing Gets Protests

Montgomery County is storing stone where he wants to store lumber, Andrew L. Devlin told a zoning hearing yesterday.

The hearing was before the Montgomery County Council at Silver Spring on Devlin's request for industrial zoning of a tract at Linden, Md.

A large and irate group of citizens appeared to oppose the rezoning as a further encroachment on one of the oldest residential communities in the county.

Warren Browning, attorney for the petitioner, pointed out that the county now is using part of the property for a stone dump and has purchased an adjoining acre for use as a road machinery depot.

County Council members said they had not known the county was using the property nor that the acre had been purchased by County Manager Irving G. McNayr.

Thomas Griffin, advertising manager of the Washington Daily News, said he had written several times and finally had sent a registered letter to McNayr to ask about the stone pile and had been answered that his query would be referred to the "proper officials."

Stephen James, former president of the Montgomery County Civic Federation, who led the opposition, said his group would be back to oppose any rezoning to permit such use of the property.

Thomas C. Keley, acting as chairman in the absence of Frederic P. Lee, president of the Council, said that council members did not know about the dump or the land purchase but individual members had felt that the county should not do what private citizens could not. No action on the petition or seven others heard was taken yesterday.

Alexandrians Move to Draft Acting Manager Permanently

By William H. Smith
Post Reporter

A movement is gaining momentum to draft Robert S. Marshall, Alexandria's temporary city manager, for the job permanently.

Marshall, who was appointed March 10, has become so popular with city employes a group of them are preparing to circulate petitions among fellow workers asking him to apply for the regular job. The 43-year-old former Alexandria Housing Authority executive also has been asked by several influential citizens to seek permanent appointment.

When appointed by a City Council vote of 4 to 3, Marshall said he was not interested in the job permanently. Asked yesterday if he would reconsider if requested, Marshall answered, "That would require a lot more thought."

Marshall said he was unaware of the draft movement. His supporters have the indorsement of at least one member of the Council, which has the appointive power. R. Samuel Luckett, one of the four councilmen who voted for Marshall, said emphatically he would vote for his retention.

Councilman Albert A. Smoot, who also voted for Marshall, said he would not back him as a permanent manager, since he favors a manager with longer experience.

Councilman Roy C. Bragg, who opposed Marshall's temporary appointment, would not commit himself on a permanent appointment, but said Marshall "has done a whale of a job, one of the best of any of our recent city managers, and morale of city employes is better than I've seen it for years."

Two other councilmen who voted for Marshall declined to say how they would vote on a permanent appointment. They are Mayor William T. Wilkins, whose term expires September 1, and Marshall J. Beverley. Wilkins said he probably would not vote on the question, since he would have no more voice in the government after September and doesn't feel he should vote on any matter which may affect the city's future.

Neither of the other two councilmen who opposed Marshall, Leroy S. Bendheim and John W. Tufloch, could be reached for comment.

Marshall supporters contend he has not only done an efficient job as acting city manager but his previous experience qualifies him well for the post. As executive director of the Alexandria Housing Authority, they insist, he solved problems identical, on a smaller scale, with those confronting a city manager.

Lorton Transfers 40 Prisoners to D. C. Workhouse

Overcrowding at the Lorton Reformatory has been temporarily solved by the transfer of 40 prisoners to the District Workhouse at Occoquan, Va., Donald Clemmer, director, District Corrections Department, said yesterday.

Clemmer blamed the present crime rate for creating the problem. The reformatory houses prisoners found guilty of misdemeanors while the workhouse has those guilty of felonies.

The official said the 40 prisoners volunteered for the change, mainly "for a change of scenery." If the rise should continue the next step would be the shifting of prisoners to Federal prisons, he explained.

Anglo-Argentine Pact Signing Slated Monday

Buenos Aires, June 25 (AP).—The Argentine government today announced it will sign its five-year trade pact with Britain here on Monday.

Under the agreement, Britain will supply the bulk of Argentina's imports, ranging from oil and coal to automobiles and whisky. In exchange, the British will get an estimated 300,000 tons of meat, cereals and other supplies.

The agreement has brought protests from the United States that it violates principles of multilateral trading and puts United States exporters in an unfavorable position in Argentina.

FBI Must Rebuild Shattered 25-Year Tradition

By J. R. Wiggins
Post Reporter

THE Federal Bureau of Investigation is just beginning to pick itself up after its worst legal smashup in 25 years.

Disclosures wrung from the FBI by Judge Reeves, in the Coplon case, it has now become clear, have put J. Edgar Hoover's 4000 agents in a tough spot.

Part of the task is a Humpty Dumpty affair. The FBI cannot, with the same assurance, promise any informant, real or prospective, that his information will be kept confidential. Even statutory limitations on revelation cannot restore the situation that existed before the Coplon case. The FBI's files are only as confidential as the least secretive Federal judge wishes them to be, and no one can know in advance how confidential that is.

The bench order opening up the documents referred to by the slips in Judith Coplon's purse dealt the FBI a triple blow.

(1) It uncovered secret informants, destroying their usefulness and in some cases perhaps exposing them to mortal risks.

(2) It damaged the reputations of many persons named only incidentally in unevaluated and incomplete files.

(3) It has added to the reluctance of informants who hitherto were shielded by confidential status.

These are three intelligence calamities against which the FBI for 25 years has tried to protect itself. It has taken the most elaborate precautions to avoid all these risks. It must now start all over again to build back the sort of inviolability its secret archives once had.

Oddly enough, the FBI itself is being blamed and criticized for the nature of Coplon disclosures that it tried its best to prevent.

Over the years, the bureau built up its own policies, traditions and precedents to the point where its intelligence gathering operations were governed by patiently perfected standards, consistently applied.

The aura of secrecy that must surround such an operation for years lent glamor to the FBI. Now the cloak of secrecy is producing more mistaken notions than mystery. Ridiculous charges of FBI mistakes are being widely circulated, and the public has very little real information on which to test the plausibility of these charges. The nature of the whole process of gathering intelligence is little understood.

There is only one FBI agent to every 40,000 citizens, but people are beginning to imagine, and fear, that an agency with all the omniscience and omnipresence of George Orwell's fantastic secret police is spying into private lives, prying into habits, customs, manners and thoughts.

Actually, of course, the FBI has its hands full taking care of the investigations into which it gets pushed by other agencies and the public. It takes a complaint—backed up by some reasonably plausible evidence—alleging a violation of law or a threat to national security, to put an agent on a private citizen's trail. In 1924, Hoover tried to make clear in a public statement that no investigation of any kind would be initiated except after receipt of information or complaints of acts constituting violation of some law over which the FBI had jurisdiction. This policy has been adhered to through the years.

Allegation Isn't Enough

IF YOUR neighbor alleges that you are a Communist, will the FBI automatically and instanter set a crew of agents to work to check your behavior?

Probably not. Possibly not even if the FBI is convinced the allegation is true. It has its hands so full of inquiries that it cannot escape that it has tried to limit its Communist searches to cases involving Communists who are known to be leaders or Communists who are believed to be involved in some direct conspiracy to violate the laws of the United States. This is true of the ordinary private citizen. If the allegation concerns a Government employe's loyalty, that is another matter.

In any case, however, the hot tips of jealous rivals, angry neighbors, disappointed lovers, business competitors and persons with kindred axes to grind will not plunge a bevy of bureau agents into hot pursuit. The FBI problem is "which hunts" and not "witch hunts."

It seemed a good idea, a few months back, to allow the world to believe the FBI had the whole country under surveillance. Maybe it scared the Communists for a while. Now the idea seems to have scared the whole country. The average citizen can rest assured FBI agents are not trying to get into his private life. They are more anxious to keep out of it than he is to keep them out.

It Just Pours In

AFTER the frivolous detail and some of the seemingly irrelevant tripe in the documents of the Coplon case, this explanation no longer is so convincing. "Why did the FBI ever gather up this junk?" people want to know. "What good was it?" "Who cares if somebody went around the house in the altogether?" "If a beautiful Russian was a little lax morally, back in Russia, what of it?" "If a clever continental opportunist swindled Nazis and Fascists alike, what significance does that have now?" "Who cares who introduced which guests at a cocktail party?"

The answer, of course, is that the FBI didn't gather it up, in most instances. The stuff rolled in over the transom. Americans

Much of the FBI's work in its preparation of a case is unsung, behind-the-scenes grind, glamorous as some of it may seem to an outsider. In espionage cases, particularly, the bureau often encounters secret writing. Here a technician uses ultraviolet light to bring out the message "between the lines" of a suspected letter

Greece Is 'Reforming' Its Guerillas

By Evon N. Clark

Mrs. Clark is a former Minneapolis newspaperwoman and a former Washington resident. Her husband is now with the Economic Cooperation Administration in Greece.

MAKRONISSOS is the island off the tip of Attica, where a unique experiment in patriotism is proving successful.

There Communists, fellow travelers and those suspected of being either are cured of virus Red—often by former Communists, former fellow travelers and former suspects. The basis of the appeal used is "filotimo."

Greeks say such an experiment couldn't work any place else in the world, because no one else has this powerful filotimo, which isn't at all the same as face-saving. Rather it's a sort of stirring up of self-esteem, a reawakening of pride in Greece's history. When filotimo is really aroused, a Greek becomes a Greek again, no matter how far he may have strayed.

His Own Brother

THE IDEA was conceived two years ago by Brig. Gen. George Bairaktaris. He would not believe that all captured Greek guerilla officers, including his own brother, were traitors to Greece.

Many of the guerillas were confused, he pleaded, by issues far from clearly drawn. It isn't fair, he said, to call everyone who isn't a nationalist a Communist. Some of these men were merely political victims who just didn't believe in the status quo. Some had been lured by lies, by promises of better living for themselves and their families.

Instead of imprisoning them or killing them, let's talk it over with them in an atmosphere free from bewilderments, Bairaktaris urged. Let's replace distrust with the sure knowledge that most Greeks are Greeks first and last.

For his ideals, Bairaktaris was cashiered from the Greek army. But he was recalled within a few weeks and named director of his own project, with the rank of colonel.

9-Mile Whale's Back

MAKRONISSOS, which means "long island," is a grayish stretch of mountain 9 miles long and 1½ miles wide, jutting like a whale's back between the blue sky and the blue Aegean Sea. It was inhabited by one shepherd and his family.

It was decided to include in the experiment not only captured Greek officers and soldiers but also conscripts and civilians who showed Reddish leanings. The men would not be termed prisoners "but rather pioneers, children of the same Mother Greece, who, through difficult times, for one reason or another, took the wrong road."

Among the first pioneers taken to Makronissos was Colonel Bairaktaris' brother.

Boiled down, the stated objectives of the island of conversion are:

(1) Pleasant surroundings created by the men themselves in an atmosphere of civilized behavior; (2) exemplary social conduct on the part of officers and no recriminations for past errors; (3) freedom given the men to improve themselves—illiterates taught to read and write, others given time from routine training to develop talents in the arts, trades and professions; (4) discussions of the comparative merits of communism and democracy encouraged. Lectures and studies supplementing regular courses to be given by academicians and authorities from the Military Academy, who donate time for sessions with the Pioneers; (5) the "convert" encouraged to forget his past and his family and friends to do likewise.

THE island is about 2 hours from Athens by car and boat. We sped through neatly washed villages with their usual Sunday strollers—young men on one side of the street, girls on the other. Occasionally the car veered for a somnolent donkey laden with faggots or sacks of fruit.

A caique that might have been in its prime when Paris of Troy kidnaped the Spartan king's beautiful wife, Eleni, was bobbingly awaiting us. Fifteen minutes out, we were aware of Makronissos. Enormous signs in Greek, fashioned of whitewashed rocks, splashed the crest of the mountain.

Elias Boundjoucas, a former resistance leader, translated the exclamatory legends: Long Live King Paul—Fight for Freedom—Fight for the Nation—Greece Never Dies—For God, King and Country. Three groups of these were set against the sky, one over the camp of each battalion.

As we dipped nearer we saw freshly painted buildings, one of which was flying the American, British and Greek flags.

"Remember now," the interpreter said, "everything you'll see, from buildings to ikons, was made by the Pioneers themselves."

A mighty sound thundered out to us. Hundreds of men rushing from neat rows of tents were shouting something that sounded to me like, "Rah! Rah! Rah! For SKI U MAH."

"No, no. That's not what you think, a college football yell," Boundjoucas said. "They're saying, 'We want arms! We want arms!' They mean they're ready to fight against the guerillas now, see?"

Then he muttered "Crazy Griks to ever have joined the Communists."

The yells ceased as a band broke into "The Star-Spangled Banner." A man came forward to greet us, Maj. George Tzanetatos, commandant of the Second Battalion. Around him were hundreds of eager-looking young men in fatigue khaki. Tanned, healthy faces, teeth flashing, tearing at their caps and berets in welcome, talking rapid-fire Greek to us and to one another, they all seemed to be falling over themselves to show everything at once.

Each battalion has a church, a guest house, a hospital, barber shop and photographic studio. The Second Battalion has just completed an open-air theater with seats carved out of rock for an audience of 3000. They've even dug out an orchestra pit below the wooden stage, which has a hand-painted backdrop and border lights fashioned of flattened tin cans. Movies, choral singing, dramas, musicals and lectures are given there three or four times a week.

The wallpaper in the guest houses was hand-stenciled. The long white mess hall was decorated with expert paintings.

"This battalion is the most artistic of the three," I was told. "But the chorus includes men from all three battalions. There are 180 in the chorus. Only four or five

Soviet Policy Running True to Form

By Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.

AN only mildly interested world found cause neither for elation nor gloom in the inconclusive end of the meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers.

The Big Four had talked through a good many sessions without spectacular discord, but they made very little progress in the direction of resolving the ancient disagreements.

In the case of Germany they achieved little, except to continue the previous differences in a slightly more amicable atmosphere. In the case of Austria, they moved ahead and even set a September deadline for the final settlement; but this date may appear optimistic as the deputies resume their intricate wrangles over the financial details of an Austrian treaty.

Had Soviet policy taken any decisive turn? Diplomats and newspapermen alike came away from Paris in a mood of skepticism.

Holding His Ground

IN 1925, SEVEN years after the First World War, Stalin had declared in a famous speech, "The tide of revolutions has been succeeded by an ebb, by a period of lull. . . . The world-wide revolutionary movement has entered a period of retreat." Four years after the Second World War, would he be thinking in the same terms? He probably would not go so far today.

He would, it is true, accept a temporary stabilization in Europe. He would recognize the success of ERP and the growing unity of the western democracies. He might well desire commercial arrangements which would ease the economic stringencies within the Soviet sphere. But he certainly intended no basic change in the political line in Europe.

And Vishinsky's ill-concealed interest in a peace treaty for Japan seemed to foreshadow only a more aggressive Soviet policy in Asia. Having enjoyed lucrative windfalls in the Far East, the USSR may now be considering how best to gather in the apples.

Arthur Schlesinger, jr., who won the Pulitzer Prize for history well before he was 30, today becomes a regular Sunday contrbutor to The Washington Post.

Son of a famous historian and Harvard professor, Arthur Schlesinger, jr., earned his own spurs as a historian with "The Age of Jackson," which won him the 1945 Pulitzer Prize, and he has been associate professor of history at Harvard since 1946. "The Age of Jackson" also received the New York Newspaper Guild award for "best book of the year."

Now 31, Schlesinger is married and has three children.

Behind its own lines in Europe, moreover, the Soviet Union pressed hard its policy of consolidation. In essence, this policy means a systematic elimination of all independent groups because any such group may become the nucleus of opposition to Soviet power.

The two groups which the USSR evidently fears most are (1) those Communists whom nationalism has turned against Moscow, and (2) those devout persons whom religion has turned against totalitarianism. In both areas, Moscow made progress last week in tightening its controls.

Purge Is Spreading

THE infection of Titoism has continued to spread through eastern Europe, even if geographical remoteness and independent military strength have permitted it to develop into open defiance only in Yugoslavia. In Hungary, Laszlo Rajk, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and a score of other Hungarian Communists and fellow travelers were arrested as spies serving the interests of "Trotskyism, Fascism, Zionism and Anti-Semitism." In Albania, Kochi Xoxe, secretary of the central committee of the Communist Party, was executed for nationalist deviations.

The expulsion from the Bulgarian Communist Party of former Vice Premier Traicho has opened the way for a systematic purge. And rumors persist that Rumanian Communist Gheorgiu-Dej will follow his colleague Patrascanu into nationalist disgrace. The evidence suggests that the party purge is continuing in the USSR itself.

In the meantime, the struggle against religion moved toward a new crisis in Czechoslovakia. The government set up a phony "Catholic Action" group and whipped up popular feeling against Archbishop Joseph Beran. The Vatican countered by an excommunication decree directed against all

The occasion was a dinner June 14, and the jokesmith, of course, is Soviet Foreign Minister Vishinsky. Despite the surface amiability, however, observers doubted that the Soviet leopard had changed is spots

Hongkong Bares Teeth, But Hopes to Stay 'Neutral'

By Hessell Tiltman

Chief Far Eastern Correspondent, London Daily Herald

HONGKONG, June 25.—This 391-square-mile British colony at the mouth of the Pearl River is the complete neutral in China's "war of brothers."

In line with the recent statement by Foreign Minister Bevin that Britain has never intervened in China's internal affairs and has no intention of doing so now, Hongkong has been doing business impartially with both Nationalists and Communists. Hundreds of wealthy Chinese Nationalists have evacuated their families from strife-ridden China to Hongkong's secure acres, and with around 10,000 Chinese newcomers still entering the colony monthly, overcrowding has reached the fantastic point where one Chinese millionaire family with five limousines is living in two rooms in a back-street tenement.

The Chinese Communists are using the colony as a clearing house for their trade with the outside world. Hongkong vessels are sailing regular schedules between the colony and Communist-held China ports. Both pro-Kuomintang and pro-Communist publications circulate freely.

Yet the Communist sweep across China has meant a tough struggle to maintain business as usual. Trade with China has fallen off in recent months from 40 to 20 per cent of Hongkong's total commerce. Most of this the colony has made up by spreading its trade farther afield, from north Korea and Japan (which now accounts for about 5 per cent of Hongkong's overseas trade) to southeast Asia and India.

So Hongkong remains the busiest market place in the Orient. Around 700 ocean-going and river vessels enter its harbor monthly. In May they landed 351,000 tons of cargo. Kai Tak, its international airport, had its busiest-ever month's operation in May, when 1461 aircraft landed and departed, carrying 40,000 passengers. Hongkong's ferries, linking Victoria City (capital of the colony) with Kowloon across the harbor, are carrying a record-busting 90,000 passengers daily.

The volume of Hongkong banknotes in circulation has reached an all-time high of 880 million Hongkong dollars (an increase of more than 100 millions since Mukden fell to the Communists last fall), and it is estimated that 70 per cent of this is held by Chinese in south China who prefer the stable British banknotes to Nationalist money.

A visitor, viewing downtown Hongkong with its luxury stores, its expensively dressed and bejeweled Chinese women, and its streets congested with British and American limousines, might be pardoned for imagining that the colony's biggest headache is its traffic problem. But Hongkong's "old hands"—and a majority of its 12,000 British, Americans and Europeans and its two million Chinese are long-time residents—remember what the Chinese Communists did to the Amethyst and other British warships on the Yangtze, and are acutely aware of political and economic uncertainties ahead.

When A. V. Alexander, Britain's Defense Minister, flew to Hongkong this month to confer with Britain's Far Eastern military and naval chiefs and review plans for the maintenance of law and order in the colony in any emergency, he found neither complacency nor jitters, but rather a keen awareness of the need for preparedness while pursuing policies of peace.

12,000—And More

HONGKONG'S 3500 heavily mechanized police are being reinforced by 1500 special constables recruited locally. Backing up these units are augmented military, naval and air forces which eventually will number some 12,000 men. And Alexander warned anyone that these military reinforcements "are not the extent of Britain's resources."

He stressed that while Britain desires to maintain the friendliest relations with whatever government controls China, the security of Hongkong's two millions living under the British flag is Britain's responsibility, and any threat to the colony's law and order would be answered by appropriate defense measures.

The defense of Hongkong from external attack might not be easy. The city of Victoria on Hongkong island, is only one mile from Kowloon, on the mainland. Hongkong's solitary airfield at Kai Tak is inadequate for heavy military operations, and a new airport under construction will not be completed this year. The city's water supply might well become a cause for anxiety in the event of sustained military attack.

On the other hand, Hongkong is garrisoned by some of Britain's best United Kingdom and Gurkha troops. In training, equipment and morale, they are far different from any forces the Chinese Communists have yet clinched with.

Air "cover" could be provided by anchoring two or three aircraft carriers in the harbor. Hongkong's water supply is at present sufficient for 60 days.

In the event of a land blockade, the British are ready to institute a "sea lift" to supply Hongkong's population with the necessities of life.

All that can prudently be said at present is that the Communists inside Hongkong have been most correct in their behavior; that Communist-held China is on the list of Hongkong's useful customers; and that it appears probable that the Chinese Communists may continue to find the colony a convenient focal point through which to channel much of China's foreign trade during the rehabilitation period ahead. For these reasons belief is strengthening that the Communists will decide to pass up the colony for the present, on the principle that a goose that lays golden trade eggs for the Reds, among others, should not be unnecessarily disturbed.

PARIS, June 25.—Peasant France, chewing its Marshall aid cud, is as content as the proverbial cow. Industrial France, agleam with new tools and machines, is booming. But labor France—the France of the miner, the dock-worker and the factory hand—is maggoty with unrest.

FRANK GERVASI

This is so widespread that it is almost certain to produce crippling strikes this autumn, probably as soon as the paid vacations of July and August are over. They will retard French recovery and proportionately nullify the beneficial effects of Marshall help unless the dead-center government of M. Henri Queuille takes drastic steps to prevent them.

The most important step would be one which would solve the problem posed by Jacques Latour, 45, a skilled mechanic in a sewing machine assembly plant on the outskirts of Paris. Jacques earns 22,000 francs a month, or about $67.50. That is 10,000 francs more than the minimum and 7000 above the average. Nevertheless, Jacques is sore and so are a lot of Jacques all over France.

This is the problem as he put it:

"'Si on mange,' he exploded over a glass of rouge ordinaire in a workingman's cafe in Clichy, "ôn ne s'habille pas—If one eats, one does not clothe himself. Ecoutez . . ."

And Jacques explained. A shoddy suit costs 10,000 francs. A new pair of shoes sets a man back at least 3000. An ordinary dress for Mme. Latour costs from 3000 to 5000 francs.

Food takes from 75 to 85 per cent of Jacques' wages. His rent, fortunately, is low. It accounts for 5 per cent of his pay. But bus fares, an occasional movie, medicines and running expenses—gas, light, what little heat he can afford—take the rest. There is no money for clothing, furniture, savings.

Something Must Give

"OUI," agreed Jacques, "things are better now than last year and certainly than in the year before that. The franc is stronger. Prices have stopped going up. I don't need to worry any more about how much less my money will buy this month than it did last month.

"Mais, monsieur, prices are still too high. The shops are full and I cannot buy. Either the government brings down the prices or I must have more wages. Je suis bon Cretien and I am anti-Communist. I do not wish to make strikes and embarrass my government but, monsieur, how else can I convince les patrons—the employers—that I have not sufficient money?"

The problem was reiterated by other workers. In some mines in the Pas de Calais, miners toil naked, even in winter, because they cannot afford work clothing. For the reverse of the maxim is equally true: "If one clothes himself, one does not eat . . ."

It is a hard economic fact that millions of French workers are worse off than they were last year. Overproduction in some lines has caused reductions in work-weeks. The number of hours in many cases has shrunk from the normal 46 to 40 and often 30.

The fault is less one of overproduction than of high prices. Stocks are not moving in the shops because they cost too much. Orders have fallen off and factories have begun to cut down on payrolls.

Prices have been free for some time but wages have been frozen since the liberation, when collective bargaining was suspended. Reestablishment of the right to sell their services for as much as they can get will be one of the principal objectives of the trade unions in coming months.

Other goals will be improved working conditions and decent housing. In neither field has there been much progress since World War I. The national average for housing is two rooms per family, which means that a great many French families have much less.

THE political effects of mass strikes for attainment of those ends may be far-reaching. Strike pressures could move the Queuille government farther left, labor experts believe, or push it out of the way altogether to make way for another coalition that might include Communists. Or, if matters deteriorated completely, the door might be opened for De Gaulle.

Recently the newly formed anti-Communist Confederation Francaise des Travailleurs Cretiens, 850,000 strong, voted to join the Communist Confederation Generale du Travail in pressing for higher wages and better working conditions. The CGT, once a titan of some 4,500,000 members, now has 2,500,000. It lost prestige after its failure to pull off a general strike last year and the purely political, anti-Marshall aid character of its coal strike became evident. It is making a new bid for power.

This startling development—and announced plans for "unity of action" between Catholics and Communists is nothing less—was followed by authoritative reports that the Socialist Force Ouvriere, or at least some elements thereof, is contemplating similar action. The FO was born of the CGT split in November, 1947, when the grand old man of the French labor movement walked out on the Communists and took with him 1,400,000 members.

Numerically, the non-Communist trade unions are only a tail on the CGT dog. The few balky elements of the FO and CFTC, the 130,000 of the Confederation Generale des Cadres and the 330,000 of the Federation de Travailleurs Independents can muster only a fraction of the CGT power. There is little likelihood of the tail wagging the dog.

Material Considerations

CFTC leaders say that they have no intention of playing political games with the Communists. French workers, they say, are fed up with political strikes. They want better wages or a concrete government policy for reducing prices.

"No division exists among workers," said Paul Vignaux, an energetic young CFTC Teachers' Union executive. "Workers toil side by side. They don't care whether the men next to them are Communists or Christians. They have common problems and they want to work together to settle their claims just as they work together on the assembly line."

But the dog can wag the tail. Anti-Communist unions may follow the CGT toward what may be perfectly legitimate goals and find themselves nevertheless pursuing strictly Communist ends. There is no reason to believe that the Communists have abandoned hopes of wrecking the Marshall Plan in France, key nation of western Europe.

Last year's Communist-led strikes, called neither for higher wages nor any other legitimate reason but to protest a government decree purporting to regulate union practices, cost France dearly. About 20 million dollars of Marshall money that might have gone for cotton, cattle feed, fertilizers and crude oil had to go for coal.

The strikes lost France six million tons of coal, and for the first time in French history strikers sabotaged the mines, flooding 12 pits, burning and wrecking above-ground installations. Several mines at Ricolin, in the Loire region, can never again be used.

Today, after a year of hard work, France has come back with surprising vigor. Coal production is higher than in 1938. Steel and iron output is breaking records. Agriculture is being mechanized and is producing ever-increasing quantities of food. But if the Communists are permitted to generate strikes, France's recovery may suffer irreparable damage.

Industrialists Secretive

THE government rightly fears that wage increases would prove inflationary and tend to push prices up again. Most labor leaders agree. They may yet forgo such demands if the government can find a formula for rolling back prices.

Any price rollback would reduce industrialists' profits. Are those profits large enough to permit price reductions? The answer is difficult to find. Even our Marshall Plan technicians have had difficulty in getting at the facts and figures involved. Production costs and profits are carefully guarded secrets.

It is notorious that French industrialists and big business men evade taxes wholesale. Frenchmen are said to keep three sets of books: one to show the tax collectors, one for the stockholders and one that tells the real story.

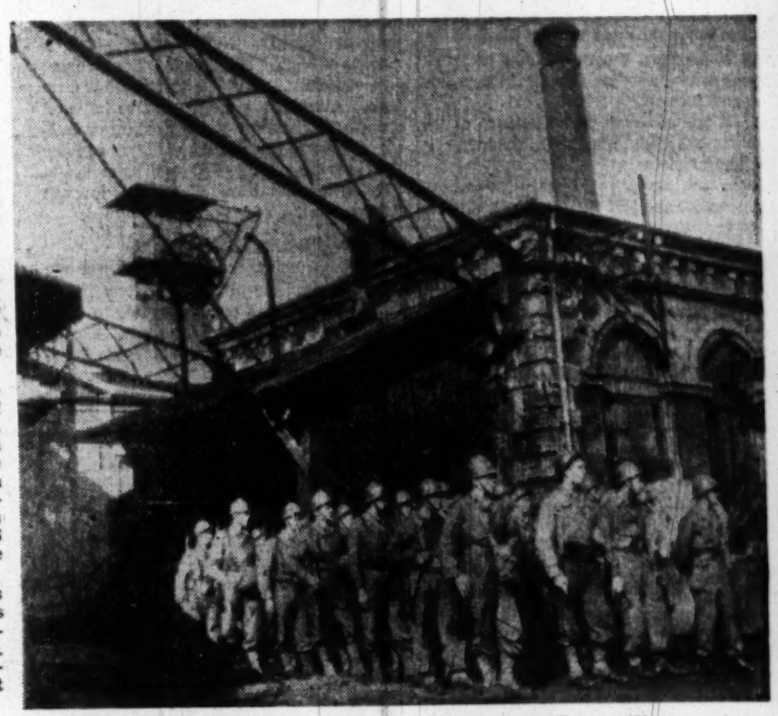
An official of the Confederation Nationale du Patronat Francais, French equivalent of our National Association of Manufacturers, admitted that profits this year are better than last. Net profits, after taxes, he said, were 3½ per cent this year, 1 per cent higher than last. More candid businessmen and manufacturers said, however, that some companies are paying stockholders as much as 15 and 16 per cent in dividends, which would indicate a far larger margin.

All of the more progressive industrialists admit that the ultimate solution to France's high-price problem is more and cheaper production and bigger markets outside of France. But European trade has not increased sufficiently to take French products in great volume.

Workers Won't Wait

THE problem, however, is immediate and will not wait on long-range solutions. France cannot wait to learn new production tricks—and most French industries are 20 years behind the times—for prices to come down sufficiently to enable those who produce the goods, the workers, to buy.

The government must do "something," as Jacques said, and that "something" had better be good. To survive the strikes that will come in the fall, the government must keep the support of the non-Communist unions.



Steel-helmeted soldiers occupy the Villiers mine at St. Etienne in last October's mine strike, which cost the Communist CGT two million members. It is beginning to get them back, with the wage-price issue as bait

The government, composed of Socialists, Radical Socialists and the Movement Republicain Populaire (Christian-Democrats) will be susceptible to the pressures from the Socialist Force Ouvriere and the Catholic CFTC.

Much depends on what happens at the Socialist Congress next month. If the Socialist leaders decide to pull out of the government—as some believe likely—then the fat will be in the fire. But if they stay, they must still meet the workers' demands in the fall.

Unless some formula is found by M. Queuille and his ministers before then, the Communists may succeed in forcing creation of another Front Populaire government of dismal memory. Ultimately, power is what the Communists want. Support of workingmen's pleas for higher wages is only a means to that end.

Quebec Backing Gives St. Laurent the Edge

CANADIANS go to the polls Monday for the first time since June, 1945. The concentrated two-month election campaign is at an end. The Liberals, led by Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent, are confident of winning a safe majority in the 262-seat House of Commons at Ottawa. A similar confidence is not shown by any of the other parties, though the Progressive-Conservatives, under the leadership of George Drew, are putting up a brave front.

The splinter CCF is acknowledged by its own leaders not to be in the main running. This in itself is likely to increase the vote for Canada's two traditional parties—Liberal and Conservative.

Elderly Vigor

OF THESE TWO, the Liberals are in much the stronger position. Their weakness is that they have been in power for 10 years; they have indeed been in power for 25 years out of the last 30. The time surely comes when age overtakes a political party, but there are few signs that the Liberals in Canada are suffering from senility.

Everything from the vigor of their campaign, their enormous confidence, to the Gallup Poll, suggests they retain the confidence of the electorate. Polls are in bad repute since the boners in the United States last November. Nevertheless, the Liberals were reported as holding 40 per cent of the national vote at the end of May, as against only 33 per cent four weeks before. The Progressive-Conservatives were holding their own at 25 per cent, showing no gain. The CCF had dropped 1 per cent, to 13, while the undecided vote had dropped in direct ratio to the rise in the Liberal standing.

Gallup's findings showed that the Liberal gain was concentrated in the Province of Quebec. This was natural enough, since St. Laurent is a French-speaking Canadian from that province, which is traditionally favorable to its own sons. But the poll is now almost a month old and, in that month, Quebec's provincial Premier, Maurice Duplessis, leader of a provincial party known as the Union Nationale, has thrown his party into the campaign.

Last July, Duplessis, who feuds endlessly with St. Laurent, annihilated the Liberals in a provincial election. His machine is now campaigning vigorously for Drew's candidates. These may make some gains, for the machine is powerful, but it is generally thought that the Conservatives will do well if they win 13 of Quebec's 73 seats. The traditional Liberal French Quebec bloc seems to be holding fast.

Quebec, with its 73 seats, and Ontario, with its 84, dominate the election. Elsewhere in Canada, it is likely that the present alignment of parties will be reasonably unchanged.

The Maritime Provinces, which, with Newfoundland, dispose of 34 seats, are, and are likely to remain, predominantly Liberal. West of the Great Lakes there are 71 seats. The Liberals have a good share of the ridings in Manitoba and British Columbia and are expected to hold them. In Saskatchewan, the last general election saw a CCF sweep of its 21 seats. But the CCF's socialism has proved unpopular with the rugged individualist voters of that farming province, and the Liberals are confident of making gains. Alberta, which since 1935 has been in the grip of another splinter party, the Social Crediters, is expected to show small change.

What all this political arithmetic adds up to is that the Liberals alone can hope to get a clear majority—that is to say, 132—of the seats in the House of Commons. They, with a few independents, had almost that figure in the last House. No one seems to believe that the Progressive-Conservatives can overturn the vote enough to get a clear majority themselves. The best they can hope for is to stalemate the House of Commons, in which event the largest group, the Liberals, would try to carry on in uneasy alliance with right-wing CCF members.

Undercover Stabs

THE absence of real issues, and the presence of new personalities at the head of the Liberal and Conservative parties, have meant that the campaign has been a demonstration of loyalty to chieftains, together with a virulent and sometimes unscrupulous undercover campaign against these two men. It has been a dirty campaign from which no one will emerge with completely clean hands.

St. Laurent is a French Catholic, Drew an English Protestant. In the back concessions of Quebec and Ontario, arguments based on these characteristics have not been lacking.

True Love Gets Soviet Imprimatur

By Edwin D. Grits

Post Reporter

A NEW KIND of love is blossoming all over the Soviet Union these days, but for reasons more realistic than romantic.

Where free love once flowered and short-term husbands were the rule, now by fiat all is changed. Love is pure, marriage solemn and divorce—expensive.

Behind all this was the Kremlin's gradual and highly un-Marxist realization that sexual promiscuity was breeding dissolute administrators, while easy marriages and divorces were producing hooligans rather than trained candidates for the Communist Party.

But, even then, love and kisses did not become a national program like farming or industrialization until military losses in the last stages of the war began to weaken state planning. And the whole thing assumed its present urgency when Soviet leaders were confronted with war-end statistics showing an overall population loss of about 20 million in a country where nearly 200 million persons had already been regarded as inadequate for various development schemes.

Thus fatherhood and motherhood became supreme virtues, and kiddies—ah, no home should be without them. Everywhere by every means these great moral discoveries were purveyed—by speeches, posters and even official example, no less. Molotov, for instance, was still married to his one and only, Pauline Zhemchuzhina—and after all these years, too.

Forgotten, at least temporarily, was the basic Marxist concept of marriage set forth by Friedrich Engels, who declared that public ownership would end the family as an economic unit, that housekeeping would become a social industry, that marriage would be a matter of long or short "inclinations."

Lucrative Avocation

AS PART of the new idealization of family life, the government established such honorary titles as "Mother-Heroine" for wives bearing 10 or more children, the "Order of Glory of Motherhood" for seven to nine children, and the "Medal of Motherhood" for five to seven children.

Such fertility not only made family women equal to career women in terms of social recognition, but it also provided cash benefits. Payments of 400, 1300, 1700 and 2000 rubles were provided for the third, fourth, fifth and sixth children, respectively. In addition, mothers were allowed a monthly allowance of 80, 120 and 140 rubles for their fourth, fifth and sixth children.

The incentive can be appreciated when it is pointed out that wages run from about 250 rubles a week for unskilled labor to about 500 for a skilled mechanic.

More ambitious mothers get an initial payment of 2500 rubles and a four-year monthly allowance of 200 rubles for the birth of the seventh and eighth children, while the ninth and tenth offspring qualify the mother for a cash prize of 3500 rubles and a monthly allowance of 250 rubles.

The big money is for each child after the tenth, when the payoff is 5000 rubles outright and 300 rubles a month.

Most recent figures available show that 1,700,000 women have been decorated with the Order of Glory of Motherhood and the Motherhood Medal, while 18,000 have received the title of Mat'-Geroinya.

Business Kicks In

THE government follows through by providing maternity leave for working mothers at average pay, and complete medical attention. Industrial enterprises are also obligated to pay the parents 120 rubles for a set of linen and 180 rubles for food upon the birth of a child if one of the parents has worked at the place not less than three months at a salary not exceeding 500 rubles.

The mother is later eligible for the use of free nurseries and preschool institutions to free "the Soviet woman of the necessity of making the difficult choice between her work and her child and enable her to take advantage of the complete equality with man granted by the constitution." Which, of course, is another way of revealing that while love and family life are all right up to a point, workers are really Russia's need.

Officially, however, family life is being enhanced in every possible way as a means of promoting social stability as well as providing a training ground for future political and social discipline.

Since the mid-30s, the Soviet government has passed one law after another to curb obvious social and economic disintegration from "seasonal marriages" for sex alone. And now, marriage is a most serious undertaking while divorce is a far cry from the postcard notices of former days.

A Peacemaker Court

UNDER the new laws, persons seeking divorce must first present their case before the People's Court, which attempts to save the marriage but is not authorized to grant a divorce.

Should reconciliation fail, the person may then petition the next higher court, where extensive hearings are held and many witnesses called. A divorce is granted only after the court concludes that the family is beyond salvage.

Although the court does not entertain specific grounds for divorce, recent court actions have been based on such charges as jealousy, incurable disease, violation of marital fidelity, incompatability, desertion, lack of love, long prison sentence and just plain endless quarreling.

Actual divorce action is, however, out of reach for many Soviet citizens of low income, as it costs 100 rubles to file a petition. An additional 50 rubles is charged for registering the divorce, while the court assigns a fee of from 500 to 2000 rubles to be paid by one or both parties.

Nonpayment of alimony, incidentally, is now punishable by imprisonment up to two years. The law has also been changed to limit alimony generally to one year, whereas previously it was a lifetime penalty.

If divorce involves children, the parent who does not assume custody is obliged to contribute a fixed sum for their support, usually one fourth of his earnings for one child, one third if two, and one half if three or more.

Manpower Shortage

PREVIOUS indifference to illegitimacy has also undergone a change, with the government now frowning upon such "irresponsible lapses." There is still, however, no social stigma attached to children born out of wedlock.

The government has placed the responsibility for such childbearing upon the woman. The Kremlin, it is pointed out, is well aware that there just are not enough men for all the women in Russia. Stastically, there are about 82 men for 100 women.

As a result, the government has made fathers of illegitimate children immune to any action, making it clear that an unmarried woman may have all the children she wants, but at her own expense.

Revised abortion laws have also tended to stabilize the family. While abortion was never a sanctioned handmaiden to free love, its legalization in 1918 was what Lenin and other Soviet officials regarded as the lesser of two evils—the other being the widespread and age-old practice of such operations at the hands of some primitive babushka.

Current information indicates that abortion is particularly frequent in urban areas, almost in direct ratio to the acuteness of the housing shortage. One report states that the average Soviet woman has at least eight abortions; more conservative information indicates an average of four or five abortions.

Illegal operations cost from 8000 to 10,000 rubles.

Paris Gave Taut World a Breather

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

SOMETIMES an international conference fails to settle anything, yet it cannot be written off as an utter waste of time.

So it was with the session of the Council of Foreign Ministers which ended its four weeks' labors in Paris last week. It left Germany and Berlin as badly divided as before; yet it was a useful meeting for at least two reasons.

The first, and the less important reason of the two, is the one Secretary Acheson has been stressing since his return—namely, that it showed the relative weakness of the Soviet position in Europe. It showed the growing strength and self-assurance of the West; it disclosed a new nervousness and unsureness in Soviet diplomacy; and it showed, too, that Foreign Minister Vishinsky was a puppet on tight strings, dependent on instructions almost from minute to minute, "the merest utensil of his master's will."

But there was no need of a full-dress conference in a pink marble palace to demonstrate these things. The shift in the east-west balance of power had been proceeding visibly since the summer of 1947, when the Marshall Plan was born. The second, and more important, reason why this conference was useful is that it seemed to ease the tension which had been tearing Europe apart.

It did not break up in anger, as the last session of the Foreign Ministers did in London 18 months ago. It conducted its dreary sessions with outward politeness and good temper. It made arrangements for fixing the date of another meeting when the United Nations Assembly meets in New York in less than three months.

And when the Ministers found they could not agree, they drafted a moderately worded communique recording their disagreement, and providing for a few mechanisms of four-power "consultation" that might take the edge off disagreements during the summer.

Moscow Joins Chorus

THIS was so unusual for a Big Four meeting that Europe, east and west, heaved a sigh of collective relief.

In Paris, Foreign Minister Schuman announced that the period of acrimony in east-west relations was over; the Ministers, he thought, had "confirmed the detente"—the easing of tension—brought about by the lifting of the Berlin blockade.

In London, the Times felt the conference had not been in vain; "the declaration of policy published by the four powers seems to reflect a determination to keep the 'cold war' at its present temperature and to practice the gentle art of living together in Germany."

In Moscow, the newspapers were told to say that the conference had been a great step toward peace. In Belgium and Holland, where opinion is free, and in Poland, where it is not, the expressions of relief were the same.

One has to be a European, or to have lived in Europe in the recent fevered years, to understand what it means to see the east-west antagonists agreeing even on a form of words. The contrast with a year ago is striking.

One year ago this weekend the United States and Britain ordered the start of the great airlift that ended in a Soviet retreat a few weeks ago. In those days the angel of death was abroad, and millions in Europe thought they could feel the beating of its wings. Diplomacy gave way to defiance and vituperation.

On one side the tirades of Vishinsky and the other Soviet leaders became commonplace. On the western side, especially in Washington, some statesmen tried to imitate the Russians; in a single month last fall, Army Secretary Royall called the Russians "international shysters," Ambassador Averell Harriman called them "international barbarians," and Frederick Osborn, the American member of the U. N. Atomic Energy Commission, called them "murderers."

A Continent on Tenterhooks

THIS kind of thing could have had only one ending. For a good many Europeans, whose homes would be the battlefield of World War III, the tension was insupportable. Businessmen shrank from taking risks, peasants hoarded their possessions, workers spent what they had without regard to the future; for there would be no future if some hideous incident or accident should precipitate war. From now on there may be less slanging and more statesmanship.

Here in the United States, any relaxation of tension has its dangers. To some congressional leaders, the absence of crisis in foreign affairs is an anesthetic. It deadens awareness and the will to act. It helps to create the present situation in which the Senate has not even begun to debate the North Atlantic Treaty, 10 weeks after it was signed, or in which a large part of Congress would prefer to adjourn for the summer rather than approve a little over a billion dollars' worth of military assistance for western Europe. It is hard for Secretary Acheson to convince a Congress in this mood that now is the time to keep up the pressure.

Yet, politics apart, American policy-makers must know in their hearts that the present abatement of tension in Europe is infinitely preferable to the position of a year ago. The Big Four will now do their wrangling for a time at the level of colonels in Berlin and subordinate Foreign Office officials in committee rooms in London. Governments and peoples will have a chance to go about their business.

Austria Pays Dearly

EVEN the optimists concede that there will be plenty of east-west wrangling this summer. The miserably small agreements reached at Paris seem to have been drafted in a way to encourage misunderstanding.

Take, for example, the agreements on Austria, in which the only real bargain of the Paris meeting was struck. Outwardly it was an important bargain. The Russians gave up their long and stubborn championship of Yugoslav claims to a slice of Carinthian territory, along the Austrian-Yugoslav border. The Westerners agreed that Austria should make a lump-sum payment of 150 million dollars, over a six-year period, for the Austrian properties seized by the Nazis and then claimed by Russia as war booty.

It was a hard bargain; it was no wonder that Secretary Acheson said the other day that the future Austria would have "to scratch a living."

In this agreement, so precise at first glance, there was ample room for quarreling if the Russians should choose to quarrel. The deputies of the four powers were directed to agree by September 1 on a definition of the properties in eastern Austria to be relinquished by Russia. They could argue for weeks or months over this list, if Moscow gave the word.

Nothing was said in the agreement, moreover, about the withdrawal of troops which would follow an Austrian treaty. Would it take place 90 days after the effective date of the peace treaty, as it did after the pacts with Italy and the satellites? Or would it be put off for a year, as Moscow hinted during the Paris meetings?

There will be a general election in Austria in October, with the Communists again putting up candidates for Parliament. Moscow can have little hope that the Austrian Communists will make any better showing than in the 1945 election, when they suffered a catastrophic defeat. In these circumstances, might it not serve Soviet purposes to delay conclusion of the treaty until after the election, when the political outlook in Austria will be clearer?

The 14th st. Frontier

THE opportunities for wrangling over Berlin are even greater than those over Austria. The communique of the Foreign Ministers did confirm the lifting of the blockade, but this in itself was no guarantee that the Russians might not resume their disastrous diplomacy of last summer. Berlin itself remains divided, a nightmare of municipal administration.

Secretary Acheson asked the press last week to imagine Washington divided at 14th st., with two governments, two currencies, and the troops of four occupying armies administering sectors of the divided city. This, he said is the position in Berlin.

It takes no great imagination to foresee squabbles between the eastern and western administrations over a thousand issues that may arise. The best that can be said for the Foreign Ministers' agreement is that it created four-power procedures under which these disputes can be aired and perhaps settled.

Nothing positive was done to stimulate the flow of east-west trade across the line that divides Germany. The agreement contained little more than a pious declaration of hope that existing barriers to the movement of goods and persons might be lowered.

The real meaning of the agreement, as it affects Germany, is that the two halves of the divided country will go their respective ways—the west governing itself with a new federal republic, under a cumbersome and possibly unworkable democratic constitution; the east firmly clamped under Communist rule, directed in reality from Moscow.

The western Ministers take at least this satisfaction in the situation: that nothing was done at Paris to hamper their freedom of action in the western zones. Soviet Russia will have no voice west of the Elbe. The west intends, as Acheson said last week, to carry out its west German policy without interruption or delay.

Powder Keg of Refugees

THIS will be more difficult than the Secretary made it seem. Western policy-makers see new troubles arising, and old ones becoming intensified, as the fifth postwar year in Germany begins. One example is the presence of from 10 to 14 million refugees from eastern Germany who now live crowded into the western zones, foully housed, often unemployed, the prey of any future Hitler who may try to exploit their nationalism and their misery.

The presence of this great mass of discontent would be a source of danger if there were a single Allied occupation, as in Japan. The existence of three western allied authorities in western Germany, each with different ideas of Germany's future, complicates the task ahead. Somehow American, British and French views will have to be reconciled if the new civilian regime there is to accomplish its great task of bringing a peaceful western Germany into the western European community.

Finally, the shadow of economic recession in the United States and the deepening export crisis in England is bound to darken the German picture for the rest of 1949. The western allies have every justification for wanting to keep their quarrels with the Russians within bounds. The west will have troubles enough of its own, just as Russia will have trouble in meeting the economic needs of its satellites. Both will have reason to be thankful if the Paris agreement really means a relaxation of east-west tension for the months ahead.

Swiss Rebuke Radio Station for Hiring Red

BERN, Switzerland (AP).—The management of the government-controlled radio station at Basel has been "severely reprimanded" for hiring a former Communist editor to write radio plays for children, the Swiss Federal Council announced.

Radio Basel hired Peter Hirsch, former editor of the Communist paper Vorwaerts, to write a series of plays entitled "The Voyages of Great Discoverers" and a serial on the adventures of Robin Hood.

Dr. Joseph Condrau, member of Parliament of the Catholic-Conservative Party, protested to the Federal Council against the employment of a Communist author by the state radio, although the radio authorities claimed that Hirsch's plays were carefully screened and "entirely nonpolitical."

World Bank's Lending Now 'Productive'

THREE YEARS ago today the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development—sometimes called the World Bank—began operations with 40 countries sharing in its ownership. Today there are 48 member countries, and the Bank has aided its members by granting credits totaling $650,100,000.

EUGENE BLACK
New President of World Bank

The dual purpose of the Bank—to make loans for reconstruction of war-devastated areas and to make loans to help underdeveloped member countries—is spelled out in its title. In its earliest days the Bank was concerned primarily with reconstruction loans. The first loan, of 250 million dollars to France, was made for that purpose. Other European countries in which loans were made were the Netherlands, 207 million dollars; Denmark, 40 million dollars; Luxembourg, 12 million dollars; and Belgium, 16 million dollars.

It had been hoped at the Bretton Woods Monetary and Financial Conference that, by the creation of the International Bank, sufficient resources would be pooled to finance the major reconstruction of the Allied countries. But very soon after the war it became apparent that International Bank loans would not be sufficient, and the United States, with various governmental loans and other forms of aid, such as the Marshall Plan, undertook the rehabilitation of Europe. This allowed the International Bank to focus its attention on the "development" phase of its activities.

Phones for Brazil

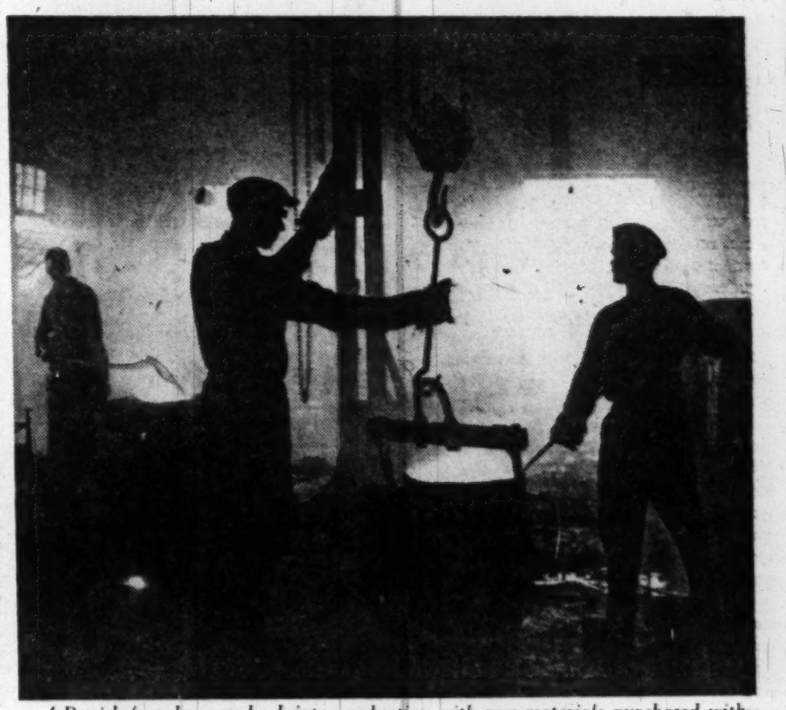
IN ADDITION to loans to European members, the Bank has made credits totaling $125,100,000 available to Latin American countries for development purposes. The largest of these was to the Brazilian Traction, Light & Power Co., Ltd., a Canadian corporation operating in Brazil. The Bank lent 75 million dollars to this company—and the loan was guaranteed by the Brazilian government—to assist in financing the company's hydroelectric facilities and to add to its telephone installations in Brazil.

The 75 million dollars will be used to purchase equipment in the United States, Canada, the United Kingdom and Continental Europe. This amount will cover the major part of the foreign exchange required by Brazilian Traction, Light & Power in an expansion program which the company estimates will cost the equivalent of about 182 million dollars in the next four or five years.

This loan is typical in several ways of what the Bank is doing. First, it is a productive loan. Brazil needs additional electricity in the industrialized Rio de Janeiro and Sao Paulo areas. By making more electricity available, and by increasing telephone facilities, the creation of more wealth in Brazil is made possible.

Second, the International Bank has provided only part of the estimated total cost of the project—the part needed to furnish the foreign exchange. Local costs, such as for labor and for materials which can be supplied locally, are to be met from other sources.

Other loans made to Latin America include 16 million dollars to Chile, of which $13,500,000 is for a hydroelectric project and the balance for the purchase of agricultural machinery; and $34,100,000 to Mexico. Of the Mexican loan, $24,100,000 is to be used to finance the importation of equipment and materials for the construction of new steam and hydroelectric generating stations, transmission lines and distribution systems in various parts of that country. The balance is to be used for the expansion of generating and distribution equipment in the Mexico City area.



A Danish foundry goes back into production with raw materials purchased with a 40 million dollar World Bank loan.

Officials of the International Bank, in commenting on its loan policy, point out that much of the information on which decisions are based must be gathered in the country seeking a loan. For this reason the Bank sends a mission to a country to study not only the specific project for which a loan is sought, but also the general economic conditions prevailing in the area. The Bank has economists, engineers, and technicians on its staff to advise on such projects as hydroelectric development, irrigation, transportation, agriculture and various industries. If needed, outside consultants are retained for a specific mission.

These studies take time, but officials say that in the past year data have been collected on a number of productive projects in Central and South America, the Middle East and other underdeveloped areas. Since many of the necessary studies are now being completed, Bank officials expect that a series of new loans will be announced within the next few months.

Under the Articles of Agreement, the Bank must "ensure that the proceeds of any loan are used only for the purpose for which the loan was granted." The Bank does not tell a borrower where the money must be spent; this is specifically prohibited. But the Bank can, and does, require proof of purchases before making payments, and after deliveries the Bank makes on-the-spot investigations to determine if the machinery, for instance, is put to the uses for which it was bought.

Good Business

BOTH the extensive investigation before making a loan, and the checking of the use of the money lent, are required to insure success of the Bank, its officials believe. They hold that its continued success depends upon the confidence that the investing public has in it, and that such confidence is gained only by operating the Bank as a business institution.

Continued operation of the International Bank on the scale for which it was designed will mean that from time to time the Bank itself will have to borrow funds from the investing public for the expansion of its own capital resources. The Bank has an authorized capital of 10 billion dollars, and of this total $8,348,500,000 has been subscribed by the 48 member nations. The Articles of Agreement, however, provide that 80 per cent of the capital cannot be used for ordinary bank purposes but can be called only if necessary to pay off the Bank's obligation. Eighty per cent of the subscribed capital, therefore, is in the nature of a guarantee fund.

Of the total subscribed capital, only 2 per cent was payable in gold or the dollar equivalent. Eighteen per cent was paid in the currencies of the member countries, but this money cannot be used except with the expressed permission of the respective countries. The United States is the only country which has given the Bank unrestricted use of her 18 per cent. Belgium, Canada and the United Kingdom have made small amounts of their 18 per cent available, but the other members have not yet found themselves able to do so. As a result, the International Bank has actually had the use of only the equivalent of $745,570,000 from capital subscriptions.

One Billion in All

IN addition, the Bank has borrowed 250 million dollars in the American investment market through the sale of its own bonds. The Bank has also borrowed 17 million Swiss francs by the sale of its bonds to the Bank for International Settlements. Another method by which the Bank has augmented its funds was to sell 28 million dollars in bonds from its own investment portfolio, the bonds having been received in connection with loans made by the Bank. Thus, from all sources—from capital subscriptions, from the sale of its own bonds and from other income—the International Bank has had a total of only a little more than a billion dollars available for ordinary business purposes.

Having already made loan commitments of $650,100,000, the International Bank as of June 1, 1949, had approximately 390 million dollars available for lending. Before all this is lent, of course, the Bank will have to raise additional money to carry on its work. Under present world conditions, it is expected that United States investors will provide the major share of any additional funds raised.

The Bank, its officials point out, is not competing with private capital. Indeed, one purpose of the Bank is to promote private international investment and the Articles of Agreement provide that its business is intended only "to supplement private investment" when private capital is not available on reasonable terms.

The International Bank, in fact, believes it is promoting private international investment simply by making productive loans. Loans which strengthen the economy and the credit of the borrowing country make that country more inviting to direct private investment. Officials say that the terms of the loans and the conditions under which they are made tend to promote sound economic and financial practices in the underdeveloped countries.

Gen. Clay's Successor Never Forgets He Was a Yardbird

By Brack Curry
Associated Press Staff Writer

FRANKFURT, June 25.—From mess sergeant to Military Governor in Germany is the typically American success story of Lieut. Gen. Clarence R. Huebner.

Huebner succeeded Gen. Lucius D. Clay as America's top military and administrative official in Germany. With arrival of John J. McCloy, new United States High Commissioner, Huebner will retain the military command as commander in chief of the Army's European forces.

The appointment crowns an Army career that began 39 years ago when Huebner enlisted as a buck private. As boss of America's most important military frontier across the Atlantic, his job is to keep its military might in Germany poised for any trouble erupting within or without this occupied land.

The 61-year-old Huebner is no stranger in Germany. He first gained wide attention as commander of the storied First Division in the grim battle of Huertgen Forest shortly after American troops invaded Germany.

When peace came, morale disintegrated among occupation troops. The whip-cracking Huebner was called in to restore discipline. As deputy commander under Clay, he turned green recruits into a crack fighting force.

GI Hero's Reward

HIS first love is the GI. Huebner never has forgotten that he once wore a private's uniform.

As a professional military man, he has a hard exterior that hides considerable warmth.

After a recent fire in the Mannheim Prison in which several GI inmates lost their lives, Huebner learned that one badly-burned GI prisoner refused medical attention until the others were treated. Next day he wiped out the remainder of the man's sentence.

"If you get out of line, he'll give you hell," Huebner's men say. "But if you do a good job, he'll give you a pat on the back."

Some civilians call Huebner undiplomatic. Shortly before Normandy D-Day in 1944, he briefed a group of correspondents and said:

"Gentlemen, we will take very good care of you. If you are wounded, we will hospitalize you. If you are killed, we will bury you."

On another occasion a youthful correspondent went to Huebner to lodge a complaint. Huebner pounded his desk and shouted. The correspondent leaped from his chair, pounded Huebner's desk and shouted right back.

Huebner relaxed, grinned and said:

"Sit down, son; let's talk this over."

Tongue-Tied by Crowds

HUEBNER speaks haltingly before a crowd, but relaxes with a small group. His words spill out freely. He is informal and gracious with his friends.

For the record, Huebner says: "You will understand that I can make no statements of long-range policy on Germany. It shall be my aim to carry on the existing policies (of General Clay) as nearly as we can."

Huebner designated Maj. George P. Hays, Clay's long-time deputy, "to act on all matters of military government" pending arrival of the high commissioner. Huebner explained: "I shall retain for my personal approval only those matters of military government which I cannot delegate because of law or international agreements."

In this way Huebner was able to devote most of his time and energy to the troops.

He regards his old First Division—now the core of American armed strength in Germany—as the best trained, best equipped in the Army. He has said that the Air Force, Navy and Army work with more unity in Germany than anywhere else in the world.

Army colleagues say Huebner has a flexible mind—he moves forward with the times, with new techniques in fighting.

Commenting on the spring maneuvers of the United States Army in Europe, Huebner said soldiers must be trained to cope with new developments in warfare. New type weapons, he said, have introduced new requirements for defense.

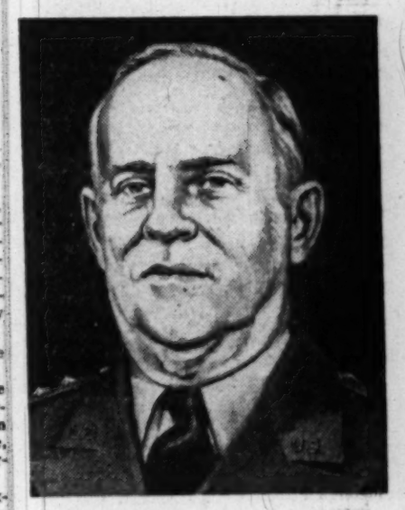
Huebner should know. He has spent 39 years studying the art of war.

Commissioned in 1916

ONE of seven children born in Bushton, Kans., to Samuel and Martha Huebner, Clarence R. Huebner milked cows, fed chickens and toted seeds to the fields as a youth. At the age of 22 he enlisted in the Army, on January 17, 1910. He served as a private, corporal, sergeant, quartermaster sergeant and regimental supply sergeant until 1916. Then he was commissioned as a second lieutenant.

Huebner fought in France in World War I, was wounded, and came out as a lieutenant colonel in 1918.

When World War II erupted, Huebner was chief of the training branch of the old War Department, with the rank of colonel. He moved up to brigadier general early in 1942 and became commander of the Infantry Replacement Training Center at Camp Croft, S. C.



Lieut. Gen. Clarence R. Huebner, as sketched by AP Newsfeatures Artist N. E. Munhall

In March, 1943, he was assigned to North Africa, where he assumed command of the First Infantry. He led this division in the Sicilian invasion, the Normandy landing at Omaha Beach, the battles of St. Lo and Mortain and the reduction of the Falaise pocket.

He then led his division across the Seine and took part in the battles of Mons, Aachen and Huertgen Forest. In January, 1945, he became commander of the Fifth Corps. It took the Roer dams, advanced across the Rhine and broke out of the Remagen bridgehead.

Huebner's men joined the Russians at Torgau in April, 1945. VE-Day found him in Czechoslovakia with his V Corps on a general line between Pilsen and Karlsbad.

In June, 1945, he returned to the United States. He was summoned back to Germany in August, 1946, to take over the remnants of American military might in Germany.

Belgian Women Voting for First Time

BRUSSELS, June 25 (AP).—Belgians will participate tomorrow in a general election overshadowed by the question of whether exiled King Leopold III should be returned to his throne.

Women will vote for the first time in the nation's history. There are more than 5,600,000 eligible voters, and voting is compulsory.

The Social Christian (Catholic), Socialist, Liberal and Communist Parties and several minor ones have presented candidates for the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate and for the nine provincial councils. Only the Social Christian Party, Belgium's largest, is supporting Leopold's return, and even it is not asking that he be brought back immediately. The Social Christians have promised a referendum on the monarchy question if they receive an absolute majority in the Senate and Chamber.

The monarchy issue has a tendency to enlarge the cleavage between the two sections of Belgium's population—the Flemish-speaking people of the north and west and the French-speaking Walloons of the south and east. There are more supporters of Leopold among the Flemings than among the Walloons.

The Walloons are a decreasing minority of industrial workers while the Flemings are a growing majority of farmers.

Some observers say the Social Christians, despite their campaign line, are not so sure they wish to win by too great a margin.

False Economy

Without a single dissenting vote the Senate returned the Treasury and Postoffice Departments appropriations bill to conference, with instructions to its conferees to insist on amendments that would permit the Bureau of Internal Revenue to hire 7000 more agents instead of 1500 additional agents as provided under the House bill. Republican and Democratic Senators alike, among them Senators Bridges and Byrd, who are leaders in the drive to cut Government costs, rose to support the motion.

This unusual unanimity of sentiment, which moved Senator Lucas to declare that it was a "very pleasant and exhilarating experience," is easily explained. The Senators realize that the Bureau of Internal Revenue is grossly understaffed and consequently incapable of doing an adequate job of checking tax returns. With an enlarged force it will be in a much better position to detect tax evasions and there will also be less danger of arbitrary assessments if the bureau has an adequate force to examine tax returns. Furthermore, in fairness to honest taxpayers, it is important to bring to book those who try to escape payment, including the Washington gamblers who are reported to be defrauding the Government.

It is not only false economy for the House to deny the bureau the funds required to do an efficient job, but, as Senator Byrd stated, it is in the interest of economy to appropriate the needed funds. For the few million additional dollars required to pay the salaries of 7000 more auditors will yield hundreds of millions of dollars in revenue that would otherwise escape the tax collectors.

British Exports

Talk of a dollar crisis that may force the British to reduce imports from the United States is likely to puzzle Americans who have been reading about the marked revival of Britain's export trade. Their confusion will be heightened by an examination of official trade statistics which show that total British exports during the first five months of 1949 totaled 3.1 billion dollars with 2.56 billion dollars in the same period of 1948. Moreover, the adverse merchandise balance —that is the excess of imports over exports for the current year—dropped to 583 million dollars as compared with 857 million dollars in the first five months of the preceding year. Although below March levels, May exports were 53 per cent above the comparable 1938 level, if allowance is made for interim price changes, and only slightly below the 56 per cent increase in volume over 1938 shown for the first three months of this year.

In face of this noteworthy achievement, the man in the street may well ask why there is growing pessimism about the outlook for a trade recovery that would enable Britain to dispense with American dollar aid when the recovery program expires. The answer to that puzzler is that British exports have been going increasingly to nondollar countries while her shipments to the United States and other dollar areas from which a large part of her imports are drawn have been declining. In May, for example, shipments of British goods to the United States amounted to only 14.4 million dollars compared with a monthly average of 22 million dollars last year and 21 million dollars during the first three months of 1949. On the other hand, British imports from the United States averaged close to 84 million dollars per month last year and in recent months have topped the 60-million-dollar level.

Britain's gold and dollar deficit is currently running at a rate of 1.3 billion dollars a year. Since the British must have dollars to pay for any excess of imports from the United States and other dollar areas, they have been making strenuous efforts to cut that deficit and reduce their dependence on ECA funds. But owing largely to the high prices charged for their goods and in part to the American business recession their drive has failed lamentably. That explains the pessimism that prevails and accounts for the rumors that the British may have to cut their imports of dollar goods.

ECA officials are currently trying to devise methods for stimulating trade between the ERP countries and the rest of the world and reducing dependence on bilateral trade agreements of the kind that have enabled, and, indeed, encouraged British traders to expand their sales to nondollar rather than dollar areas. Britain's trade problem is only one aspect of this larger problem for which a solution must be found if the recovery program is to achieve its objective of putting world trade once more on a multilateral basis and emancipating ERP countries from dependence on American dollar aid.

College Communists

The recently published exchange of letters among three graduates of Harvard University—President Conant, Mr. Grenville Clark of the corporation, and Mr. Frank B. Ober of Baltimore—illustrates very sharply the dilemma into which the power and conspiratorial character of communism have plunged the champions of the tradition of academic liberty. It will be recalled that Dr. Conant was one of the signatories to a manfesto recently issued by a group of eminent educators asserting that any member of the Communist Party is by that fact "unfit to discharge the duties of a teacher in this country." Mr. Ober, of course, is the chairman of the commission, appointed by Governor Lane to draft the legislation, now entered in the statutes, aimed at eradicating communism from the schools and colleges of Maryland.

Mr. Ober's point, made in a letter written before the manifesto was published, seems to be that collaborators with the Communist Party are equally dangerous; and in this category he proceeded to place Professor Shapley, the astronomer who appeared recently at the international rally of fellow travelers which called itself the Cultural and Scientific Congress for World Peace, and Professor Ciardi of the English department, who, it seems, had participated in "a campaign of vilification and falsehood" by the followers of Mr. Henry Wallace against the sponsors of the Ober bill. Mr. Ober's letter was in explanation of his refusal to contribute to a fund for the Harvard Law School, and, as he now insists, never intended for publication.

Mr. Clark, replying in detail to Mr. Ober at President Conant's request, said that although Harvard is badly in need of money, it will "accept no gift on the condition, express or implied, that it shall compromise its tradition of freedom." Mr. Clark recalled, among others, the example of President Lowell, who rejected a proffered bequest of five million dollars on condition that the late Professor Muensterberg, then highly unpopular because of his championship of Imperial Germany, be dismissed. The Harvard tradition, said Mr. Clark, is neither more nor less than the application of principles set forth by Milton, by Jefferson, by John Stuart Mill and by the late Justice Holmes. But even if such principles were not valid in themselves, he demanded, how would it be possible for the university to supervise the extracurricular activities of its teachers? Would it not require—> a system of student and other informers —the classic and necessary method of watching for subversive utterances? . . . Would it be sensible to have the teachers censored and watched while the students remain at liberty to speak and write and to attend such meetings as they choose, subject only to the laws of the land? . . . Are you not driven to restrict, censor and discipline the students also? What sort of place would Harvard be if it went down this road? It would, I think, not require six months to destroy the morale of both our teachers and students and thereby our usefulness to the country.

Mr. Ober, answering Mr. Clark, reiterated his belief that there are limits to academic freedom, and that a limit is reached when this freedom is utilized by a foreign power which is "plotting our destruction" and seeking the infiltration of academic centers "so that Communists can be close to scientific developments," and in a position to "corrupt the next generation and incidentally give prestige to front organizations." In a final letter, closing the correspondence, Mr. Clark retorted that, despite the manifesto, there will be no inquisition at Harvard to discover what members of the faculty may be secret members of the party. It is one thing to say that a known Communist should not be permitted to teach and another to say that all teachers must be policed and watched until they are proved not Communists.

The correspondence has considerably clarified the problem, but it has by no means solved it. Mr. Clark's doctrine is, of course, the one which affords the basis of all liberal government—that where the fullest freedom is given to all varieties of opinion, the truth must ultimately prevail. The contemporary world, however, offers much melancholy evidence that the doctrine does not apply under all circumstances. We have evidence that in order to accomplish the overthrow of states and societies it is not necessary to persuade a majority but merely to enlist a disciplined minority that is capable of unified action at moments of crisis. It may be recalled that even Milton insisted that freedom must be denied to Roman Catholics because they would be certain to use it against the interests of the state; and as far as the Puritan Commonwealth was concerned he may have been right.

But Mr. Ober is equally distant from a solution. The methods he proposes for the eradication of communism, methods that are embodied in the statute which bears his name, would, if carried to a logical conclusion, require a system of surveillance so nearly indistinguishable from communism that the difference would hardly be worth bothering about. Moreover, it would be impossible for even the most ardent and indefatigable Communist professors to corrupt, as he fears, a whole generation if that generation were not already predisposed to corruption.

It may be that this is the case. It may even be that the tradition that Mr. Clark defends and the prospect that Mr. Ober envisages are merely successive phases of a single historical movement that began several centuries ago. If this is so, then obviously neither Mr. Clark nor Mr. Ober has got beneath the surface of the problem.

The Human Element

A growing recognition of the social importance of the modern big-business executive whose policies affect the lives of great numbers of workers—sometimes whole communities—has given rise to a new concept of the characteristics of good business leaders. Significant evidence of this changed viewpoint is found in the last annual report of Harvard's School of Business Administration, in which Dean David sets forth the responsibilities of the "true" business leader as "(1) competence, (2) making the business with which he is associated a 'good society,' and (3) being himself a constructive participant in the affairs of the community and the Nation."

A "good society" implies a form of business organization having satisfied workers, knit together by a feeling of real participation in a cooperative enterprise. A businessman capable of infusing that kind of spirit into the group he heads must, as Dean David points out, have "a sincere belief in the dignity of individuals and an understanding of their motivations, not merely to increase their production but to increase their opportunities to achieve happiness as well."

The Harvard School of Business Administration is not content with preachment. Its aim is to give students planning to make business a career an insight into the personal and social problems of modern business through special instruction courses and research in human relationships. This kind of instruction is essential if the country is to have the benefit of wise, farsighted business leaders, combining service to the community with the primary duty of making a success of individual business enterprises.

In recognition of the value of such training, John D. Rockefeller, jr., has donated 5 million dollars to the 20-million-dollar fund that the School of Business Administration is trying to raise for expansion of facilities, scholarships and endowment purposes. The gift is made, however, on condition that an additional five million dollars in cash or pledges be received by July 1, 1950. It is to be hoped that the appeal for contributions to match Mr. Rockefeller's generous contribution will meet with a correspondingly generous response—not only from graduates of the school but also from businessmen who, like Mr. Rockefeller, realize the importance of the work. This work is aimed at strengthening the system of individual enterprise by "helping to raise the technical standards of efficiency and to broaden the sense of social responsibility of the leaders of business."

Out of Step

The withdrawal of the Washington branch of the American Association of University Women from the national organization is the logical consequence of the local group's ban on Negro membership. The disaffiliation is something in which no one can take any satisfaction, the Washington branch because it no longer is part of a worth-while national movement, and the AAUW as a whole because its chapter in the Capital of democracy has refused to recognize a fundamental tenet of liberalism.

Nevertheless, there is much to rejoice about in the fact that the national organization has reaffirmed unequivocally its position on admittance of qualified members regardless of race. There has been considerable opposition within the Washington branch to the insistence on "screening" which has amounted to a racial barrier; and the Virginia AAUW has voted overwhelmingly to accept Negro members. Thus the movement for an organization of university women based solely on possession of an approved diploma is by no means dead in this area. Perhaps the size of the vote by which the national AAUW disposed of the issue—2168 to 68—will serve to show Washington leaders how far out of step their huffy withdrawal has left them.

Mr. Flanagan Renamed

The President showed good judgment in nominating Chairman James H. Flanagan of the Public Utilities Commission to a new three-year term. It must be assumed that Mr. Truman's aides carefully checked the protests that were made against the renaming of Mr. Flanagan and found them unsubstantial. The only complaint which seemed to have any color of support was that in 1947 the commission put into effect a rate increase for the Capital Transit Co. 2½ days after the order was issued. That was very slight notice to give to the public. However, there was no question of overhasty action in making the decision. The PUC had conducted a thorough investigation before issuing its order. Undoubtedly it would have been well advised to allow a longer lapse of time between the announcement of its decision and the effective date of the new rates. But a complaint on the basis of these facts is utterly trivial beside the long record of conscientious public service that Mr. Flanagan has built up. He is a man who works for the public interest by insisting on good utility service as well as low rates. He has a keen sense of what is feasible as well as what is desirable. We have no doubt that the Senate will uphold the President in keeping this faithful and alert public servant on the job.

"Attack On Barden"

We are most grateful for Congressman Barden's courageous stand on the issue of separation of church and state as it relates to the question of giving public tax money for the support of church and private schools. It is unfortunate that the Roman Catholic hierarchy has singled it out as being against the Roman Catholic Church in particular. It is a shame that a man can no longer stand for the supreme law of the land, the Constitution, without becoming the subject of a vicious and untruthful attack.

The people of this land must see to it that no church, however small or however large, is permitted to receive special or preferred treatment from Federal, State, or local government for its schools or any church program it might choose to foster.

Quite unfortunately your June 22 editorial would lead an unsuspecting reader to picture the cardinal as one who was primarily interested in his own faith. This is not so for the cardinal has been not "an apostle of bigotry" like Barden and the Bishop Oxnam on occasions, but rather one keenly interested in the preservation of our democratic way of life.

When did the so-called American principle of public funds being used solely for public education come about? Only recently in the murky opinion handed down by the Supreme Court in the McCollum decision. Are Bishop Oxnam and his cohorts afraid to aid all education for fear that they may lose their sources of revenue? Is not the good bishop's stand based on self-preservation rather than for his pseudo-American principle?

Planned Parenthood

We are interested in the realistic report of the British Royal Commission on Population which recommends the inclusion of birth control information under the National Health Service.

Since 1936, the Planned Parenthood Association of the District of Columbia, Inc., has advocated voluntary or planned parenthood and has made available contraceptive information to all married women in the metropolitan area. Our experience corroborates the statement of the commission that there is little danger of "a world without children" as our patients continue to have "planned" children—planned in accordance with the best health interests of the mother and child and the economic status of the family.

We believe that if every child were wanted and planned for, we would have a healthier Nation. This can only be accomplished when the parents feel they are emotionally, physically, and financially able to assume the responsibilities of parenthood. We believe, too, that there is a high correlation between adult and juvenile delinquency, broken homes, economic insecurity and unplanned parenthood.

Great Britain is to be congratulated for initiating this program in their public health service. At this time only three States — Virginia, North Carolina and Alabama—have contraceptive clinics as part of their public health service. In all other States this service is given by privately supported clinics such as ours.

President, Planned Parenthood Association,
Washington.

Combating Communism

Our preoccupation with the military provisions of the Atlantic Pact, and with rearmament, ignores the salient means of combating communism. The worldwide groundswell of social and economic restlessness is an aftermath of war—Metternich learned the futility of restraining it with arms, because force invariably fails to halt an ideological surge.

The effective approach is economic rather than military. The effective cure is higher living standards and greater personal security. You combat communism by rehabilitation, not by rearming, and the front line of this defensive action is not in Europe, but here in the United States. Business conditions here furnish the gauge of our ability to bolster their resistance to communism, for if we falter here, we may default abroad.

If our industrial tycoons believe their interests are best served by depending on scarcities to maintain prices, rather than prices to maintain volume, our declining production will presage government deficits, and will assure those we oppose that our weight in international affairs is passing.

"Russia In China"

In your June 10 editorial, "Russia in China," you mentioned the Cairo Declaration of 1943 five times in connection with Chinese-Soviet relations in a way which is entirely wrong. For instance, the editorial reads: ". . . Under the Cairo Declaration the Chinese have lost Manchuria to Soviet Russia . . ."

The Cairo Declaration was the result of the Cairo Conference, attended by the late President Roosevelt, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, and Prime Minister Churchill. The declaration, dated December 1, 1943, reads in part as follows:

"The Three Great Allies are fighting this war to restrain and punish the aggression of Japan. They covet no gain for themselves and have no thought of territorial expansion. It is their purpose that Japan shall be stripped of all the islands in the Pacific which she has seized or occupied since the beginning of the first World War in 1914, and that all the territories Japan has stolen from the Chinese, such as Manchuria, Formosa, and the Pescadores, shall be restored to the Republic of China."

China was a participant in that conference and gave full concurrence to its decisions.

What your editorial referred to is not the Cairo Declaration of 1943 but the decisions taken by the Yalta Conference of 1945. The conferees at Yalta were President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill and Marshal Stalin. The decisions, though concerned with China's vital rights in Manchuria and Outer Mongolia, were made without consulting China and without her participation. It said nothing regarding Formosa.

Since your editorial made this fundamental error in what appears to be an elementary historical fact, your comments regarding Chinese-Russian relations and the nature of communism in China are therefore completely irrelevant.

Editor's Note: Dr. Chen catches us in an error. A slip of the pen, or something, was responsible for our not specifying the Tehran-Cairo-Yalta complex of agreements, instead of just the Cairo Declaration. Disposal of Manchuria was started at Tehran.

There, according to Sherwood's book, Roosevelt and Hopkins, President Roosevelt proposed to Stalin that Russia be given the Port of Dairen.

At Cairo, Formosa, as well as Japan's acquisitions since 1895, was earmarked for China. Fifteen months later, at Yalta, the Russians got their old concessions in Manchuria back again. Further to keep the record straight: The Chinese themselves validated this handiwork (which was made dependent upon Chiang Kai-shek's acquiescence) in a treaty with Moscow.

Why should a slip in a placename make an argument "completely irrelevant"? We leave the readers to judge. The argument, first advanced six months ago, was that in view of the upset in this complex of agreements caused by Communist successes in China and virtual Russian absorption of Manchuria, the complex of agreements should be reviewed. The disposal of Manchuria, to be sure, may have been validated by a direct Sino-Russian agreement, but the contract has been abused, and in international law, presumably, could be repudiated.

As for Formosa, there has been no treaty with Japan to validate the decision at Cairo, and in view of present circumstances, the plea was made that Formosa should be declared Japanese territory pending that event. This would enable the United States to safeguard the Japan-Okinawa-Formosa-Philippines lines till some order has been reestablished.

Saturday Shopping

I would like to second Larry Nathan's June 21 suggestion regarding retail store hours (open Saturday and closed Monday all the year) and elaborate on the advantages to all concerned.

The consumer would be able to shop on the day most preferred—that is, Saturday. Store employes would have the advantage of two consecutive nonworking days enjoyed by most Government and office workers. Employes, store owners and managers who now work six days a week would be able to enjoy the universally accepted and legally sanctioned 40-hour week.

Store managers would benefit by not having to use split shifts, hire extra workers or pay overtime, as they must now do to fit 40-hour employe working schedules in to a 48-hour store week. Little business would be lost as Monday is the slowest day of the week, and this loss would be more than made up by staying open on Saturdays during July and August.

Lincoln's Hat

Why is Abraham Lincoln in all the pictures of him shown wearing a high hat? Has anyone a picture of him in a slouch hat?

Elihu Washburne, then in Congress, described Lincoln as he arrived in the Baltimore & Ohio Station just before daylight on February 23, 1861: "He had on a soft low-crowned hat, a muffler around his neck and a short-bobtailed overcoat."

Recession Attitudes

By Mark Sullivan

Unsound Checks

THIS RECESSION, or disinflation, or readjustment, by whatever name it is called, is undeniably one thing. It is the interruption of a period of rise. That description can be applied to it without encountering argument. That no rise can go on forever is about as safe from dispute as any rule can be.

The rise in this case lasted about nine years and went so far as to amount to inflation. Five of the early years were war years; that part of the inflation was hardly avoidable practicably. Then at the end of the war, in 1945, the Truman Administration adopted policies which resulted in more inflation. Raises in wage rates, as an Administration policy, were officially urged upon industry, new raises on top of wartime raises. At the same time, prices of farm crops (which are food) were made higher by statutory Government practice of price support. Rising prices of food and rising wage rates, acting reciprocally and automatically, made a dynamic spiral of inflation.

In late 1948, inflation came to an end (or a pause, whichever it is to be). The ceasing of inflation came mainly through natural forces; an important one was unwillingness or inability of the public to buy some kinds of goods at the current high prices.

The slowing down of buying by the public had a spreading effect. In any period of rising prices, a factor in the current prices is expectation of still higher ones. Merchants buy goods with the expectation of selling them later at a higher price. Manufacturers buy raw materials with the expectation of fabricating them and selling the product at a profit. Once this factor of expectation goes out of a current price, the price tends to fall. This is accompanied by some contraction of business and industry, including some unemployment.

THAT IS where we now are. Whether it is to be a recession only, or something different, depends much on what attitude we take about it. One course is to endure the recession until it works itself out naturally. This comes about through a readjustment to each other of prices, and of the various parts of the entire economy.

The other alternative is to try to stop the recession quickly, by artificial method, including measures by the Government. One refusal to endure recession, or even admit the existence of it, is in the field of labor. There, unions and leaders demand, and strike to get, what is called a "fourth round" of wage raises, the fourth since 1945.

As to the Truman Administration, its attitude is strangely bifurcated. Persons in the Administration like to call the present condition merely a period of "readjustment." That word and equivalents of it are frequent in Administration sources. If the Administration regards the condition as a readjustment, it should let the readjustment take place and work itself out naturally.

BUT HERE enters a complex sector of Administration thought and motive. Even the comparatively mild hardship of a readjustment is politically unpopular, particularly to groups the Administration especially relies upon. So, from sources within the Administration or close to it, come proposals of measures to end the recession, a program of public works and the like.

Yet another bedeviling factor is that the Truman Administration, before the recession came, had proposed a number of measures which were to be permanent additions to the so-called "welfare state." It is difficult for the Administration now to recede from these measures, and they continue to be pressed in Congress.

Both groups of measures, the permanent "welfare" ones and the emergency ones to end recession, have a common characteristic. All call for money from the Federal Treasury, large quantities of it. The additional expenditures cannot be produced by increased taxation, the very fact of the recession makes that impossible. The expenditures must become an increase of the Government debt.

Increase of the Government debt at a time when it is already dangerously high, would introduce a wholly new condition. Senator Byrd of Virginia says an increase of the debt would be "unthinkable," having in mind possible effect on Government credit and public faith in it. Impairing of the Government credit would have effects much more terrifying than any recession. Whatever the initial effect, the second or third stage of it would probably be an inflation going much farther than what we have so far experienced.

Sesquicentennial

Washington's sesquicentennial next year has an added reason for its worthy style. It can justifiably be turned into a Nationwide celebration for, if I am not mistaken, on some carefully estimated day during 1950 it will be possible to assume that the population of this great country will have reached its sesquicentennial (or 150) million mark. Let the Bureau of Census make a calculated guess at the date and let all America accept it and celebrate accordingly on that day.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Rayburn Quells Housing Bill Row

By Drew Pearson

IT WAS Speaker Rayburn's forthright leadership inside the secret caucus of House Democrats that paved the way for the favorable vote on the public housing bill and President Truman's first major victory at this session of Congress.

Sam gave it to his fellow-Democrats—as his fellow-Texan, Jack Garner, used to say—"with the bark off."

"We have made some mistakes in the past," Rayburn declared at the closed-door meeting. "Some well-meaning Democrats refused to follow the leadership of President Roosevelt back in 1938, '39 and '40 when he was attempting to build our defenses against war.

"When Pearl Harbor was attacked, those well-meaning Democrats realized they had made a mistake. Let's not make the same mistake on this housing issue. We made a promise to the people in our platform to enact a public housing bill. We can't afford to go back on it.

"It's very easy to forget how good the Democratic Party has been to us," continued the Speaker. "In my own farm district in Texas, there were few decent farm-to-market roads until Roosevelt was elected. Since then, 47 new schools and gymnasiums have also been built in 14 counties of my district.

"Most of this was done with WPA or PWA money. It is an equally sound investment for the Government to provide decent low-cost homes and to clear the slums of our cities."

Dixiecrat John Rankin of Mississippi, a violent foe of the housing bill, "sat out" most of the caucus in the cloakroom. However, his cohort, Gene Cox of Georgia, sharply disagreed "with my good friend, the Speaker."

"This is a big-town bill," thundered Cox. "It is socialism with a vengeance. It is statism in its worst form, a complete departure from the policies we have pursued in the past. The Government is planning to subsidize individuals in (rental) homes they never can own."

"You can't call this bill socialistic," shot back young Hale Boggs of Louisiana. "Senator Bob Taft of Ohio is for it. Is he a Socialist? And I am sure Senator Ellender from my State, another supporter of the bill, would resent being called a Socialist."

Cox was only too glad to drop the subject, but he quickly accepted the challenge when his poker-playing friend, Majority Leader John McCormack of Massachusetts, began to twit him for making a hasty judgment of the housing program.

"Let me say to the gentleman that I can't understand how an Irishman can support a bill that invades the sanctity of the home," snapped the Georgian. "The Irish fought a resistance war for generations to protect their homes."

"I happen to be an American, with Irish antecedents," replied McCormack. "Any grudge I or my ancestors have had against the British down through the years doesn't belong in this debate. This is a debate on an American issue. Let's keep foreign affairs out of it."

Senate Love Scene

DURING the smoke and fire of the Taft-Hartley debate, two liberal Democrats discovered they were sniping at each other and immediately began throwing love and kisses.

The Romeo and Juliet act was played on the Senate floor by Illinois' Paul Douglas and Florida's Claude Pepper, who had been roasting Douglas for his refusal to help repeal the Taft-Hartley Act. Suddenly Douglas cooed sweetly:

"Let me say parenthetically that I have been accustomed in the past to have the heat turned on me from the other side of the aisle. It is now very interesting to have it coming from this side. But whatever the Senator from Florida asks, I shall have the same affectionate regard for him that I have always had."

"The Senator knows," replied Pepper just as sweetly, "that if this is a contest of affection, I would reluctantly accord him the position of winner."

Douglas pondered this for a moment, then seriously asked: "Does the Senator mean that my affection for him is greater than his affection for me?"

"My affection for the Senator is greater than his affection for me," corrected the Senator from Florida.

"I protest," pleaded the gentleman from Illinois. "The Senator's affection for me cannot under any conditions equal or surpass my affection for him."

"I will admit," chimed in Pepper, "that when each of us—with affection for the other—reaches the perihelion, we shall be equal."

Note—"Perihelion" is just a Senator's way of saying "heaven."

Row Over Brannan Plan

PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S three-man Council of Economic Advisers held a significant closed-door meeting with the leaders of every major American farm organization.

Those present were: John Davis of the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, Roger Fleming of the Farm Bureau, Russell Smith of the National Farmers Union, and Albert Goss of the National Grange. Though they represent varying shades of political and economic philosophy, all were gloomy about the drop in farm income.

Real bombshell of the meeting was supplied by Leon Keyserling, vice chairman of the President's council. The group had been discussing the whole field of farm legislation, particularly the Hope-Aiken bill and the now famous Brannan plan. After some minutes of this discussion, Keyserling declared:

"What's the use of discussing the Brannan plan when President Truman has already indorsed it and we, the council, have decided we don't take a position on it?"

The remark, which was aimed at Chairman Nourse, who has opposed taking a position on the Brannan plan, caused a series of embarrassed glances.

The two other council members—Keyserling and Clark—are for the plan and have wanted to go up on Capitol Hill to fight for it.

ONE WAY TO BROADEN HIS MIND

Looking at the South

2 Studies of Mobs

By Hodding Carter

GREENVILLE, Miss., June 25.

Recently a news magazine reported two superficially unrelated stories of violence. The one crime had been headlined in every newspaper in the Nation. The other crime had escaped national attention. The one crime had been committed by "two persons" unknown in a stunted Georgia community. The other crime had been committed by a student in an ancient New England college.

In Georgia, a small town Negro badman had been taken from his cell and shot to death in the South's first lynching of the year. He had resisted arrest, shot at a sheriff with the sheriff's own gun and been subsequently jailed in a cell over the sheriff's home.

From there, in the sheriff's absence, he had been taken to a remote roadside and murdered, presumably by two unidentified men. It is highly improbable that the slayers will account to society for their crime.

In New Hampshire, some weeks earlier, eight Dartmouth College students had taken a few drinks during a fraternity house bull session. Their conversation had turned to the behavior of a fellow student, an ex-GI, who they considered to be a smart aleck, a nonconformist, a maverick whose actions were an affront to the herd. So the eight students went to his dormitory room, and there one of them beat him so severely that he died a few hours later of a cerebral hemorrhage.

Suspended Sentence

THE eight Dartmouth students were suspended, and the ringleader's trial was held in Plymouth, N. H., about the same time that the Georgia Bureau of Investigation was arresting two men on suspicion of murdering a Negro. As reported in the news magazine, the student who hammered a fellow student to death with his fists received a $500 fine and a suspended sentence of from one to two years.

There are some curious similarities in these two stories, and some equally curious dissimilarities. I would like to know first why the news services did not bulletin the Dartmouth story throughout the Nation last March as they later bulletined the Georgia story. When those eight students decided to discipline a fellow student, they constituted a mob.

Obviously, they did not intend to kill their victim, but they did intend to punish him for fancied offenses against a collegiate code of behavior. They took direct and illegal mob action against him, although he was charged with no crime, and he was lynched.

But the New Hampshire story apparently was dismissed as being of no great consequence to the Nation at large, whereas the murder in Georgia was front-page news.

A Worse Symptom

I WOULD like to know next whether the Dartmouth crime would be classified as a lynching under the proposed antilynch law, together with the slayings and maimings that sometimes accompany labor strife. I wonder, too, whether there isn't some kind of parallel between the penalty of a small fine and a suspended jail sentence in the case of the Dartmouth student and the customary failure of a Southern jury to convict lynchers.

And, finally, I would like to ask whether the death of the Dartmouth student is not a more dangerous symptom of social ills than was the murder of the Georgia Negro. For a long time, hopeful men have believed that education and material security must inevitably sublimate the brutal law of claw and fang. In the eroded backlands of Georgia, ignorance and poverty breed hate and violence. We explain the mob in those terms, without condoning it.

But neither ignorance nor poverty spurred the students in a college dormitory where seven watched while their leader beat a boy about the face and stomach to teach him to conform, beat a youngster, helpless against so many, until he died. This, too, was the mob spirit, and it is neither sectional nor confined to poverty's brood. Nor is the condoning spirit confined to the wasted lands of the South.

Matter of Fact

President Truman's New Pilots

By Joseph Alsop

PRESIDENT TRUMAN being what he is, our future now depends upon the management of our affairs by Secretary of State Dean G. Acheson and Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson. Enough time has passed to give an idea of the performance of this new team, put in by the President to replace the great postwar pilots, George C. Marshall, Robert A. Lovett and James V. Forrestal. And Acheson's return from Paris, after a modest but solid and exceedingly creditable success, affords a good occasion to take a reading.

Acheson has already shown himself to be what most people always have known him to be—a man of character and great intelligence, an apt and patient negotiator, and a shrewd judge of world issues. It took all these qualities to meet the challenge of the abrupt Soviet change of front in Paris; to give away nothing just because Andrei Vishinsky was suddenly being pleasant; and to pull the plums of a German modus vivendi and a promised Austrian settlement out of the yeasty Paris pudding.

Even in this first few months, Acheson has also had some sucess in the slow task of bringing order out of the immemorial chaos of State Department organization. A machine that was built for a country that did not have a foreign policy, cannot be adapted overnight to make positive, constructive foreign policy on a day-to-day, production line basis. But with the assistance of Undersecretary James Webb, who has wisely chosen to be more administrator than policy-maker, Acheson is getting ahead with the job that was begun under Marshall and Lovett.

A Marshall Disciple

AS TO ACHESON, indeed, there can be only one doubt. The area of crisis is now shifting to the Far East. The policy elaborated by Marshall, Lovett and Forrestal specifically exclude Asia—Marshall, with his strong dislike for the Chinese Nationalist government, again and again prevented his younger partners from formulating a clear Asiatic policy. We have no clear Asiatic policy today, and the National Security Council at the moment is rather nervously trying to develop one.

All of this means that, in the Far East, Acheson has the job of laying down new policy lines instead of following old ones. Unhappily, he comes to his task with the conviction that Marshall was in the right, rather than Lovett and Forrestal. His subordinates in the Far Eastern Division may be counted upon to encourage any tendency he may have to do too little and to do it too late. The final test of Acheson will be whether he succeeds in Asia as well as his predecessors succeeded in Europe.

As for the somewhat more ornate figure of Louis Johnson, he cannot be judged unless Johnson the moneyman, Johnson the American Legion leader, Johnson the politician, is first separated from the Johnson who is also an administrator.

To date, as an administrator, although he may have indulged in a good deal of unnecessary sound and fury aimed at the crowd in the political bleachers, he must at least be credited with a determined effort to make service unification work. Under his prodding, and Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's leadership, the Joint Chiefs of Staff are at last nearing agreement on a unified strategic concept, and on the roles and missions such a concept will confer on each service.

Signs of Expediency

THE question remains, how far Johnson's highly visible Presidential ambitions will influence his administrative actions. There have been some signs that he regards Secretary Acheson as a potential rival, and means to break down the vital State Department-Defense Department collaboration so carefully fostered by the previous State-Defense team. There have also been some signs, such as his discussion of service economy with the Senate, that he may sacrifice adequate defense to the political drive for business-as-usual.

If the State and Defense Departments are to relapse into their former hostility, or if our strength is to be allowed to go slack, we may as well abandon hope. There is another danger, however, which is not a future possibility, but an existing fact.

Consciously or unconsciously, since the new team came in, the Administration has allowed the sense of urgency, the sense of crisis in the world, to diminish in the country. The Atlantic Pact has been deferred. Military aid to Europe is being put over to the next session. One of the strong arguments being made against a positive Far Eastern policy is that it will be hard to "sell."

But in fact the urgency is no less, the crisis has not become less grave, just because Vishinsky is smiling instead of hurling insults. The situation is merely more complicated, not better. And if the new team does not accomplish the old team's feat, of making the situation understandable to the country, we shall run into very bad trouble indeed.

75 Million for U. S. Machinery

Big World Bank Loan Due Tito

By Robert S. Allen

THE World Bank will shortly announce a big loan to Marshal Tito. The amount will be in excess of $75,000,000.

The money will be used to buy United States machinery and equipment; much of it for coal mining, oil refining and textile manufacturing.

The loan proposal has been in the works for months. The State Department stated it had no political objections. The delay has chiefly been due to Yugoslavian failure to provide sufficient data to the World Bank. The Bank grants loans only for specific projects. Most of the requested information is now in the hands of the Bank.

Prime mover behind the loan is Cavendish Cannon, United States Ambassador to Belgrade. A career diplomat, he was strongly anti-Tito before going to Yugoslavia. Since then, Cannon has become an equally strong supporter. This has been a very important factor in United States policy toward Tito.

Cannon made a special trip to Paris to confer with Secretary Acheson on the loan and other United States aid to Tito.

Also playing a potent role in pushing the loan has been pressure from United States businessmen. While British, French and other Allied businessmen have been grabbing off juicy Yugoslav orders, United States businessmen have been held in check. Behind the scenes, they have done a lot of vigorous squawking about this.

They have laid great stress on the fact that Marshall Plan dollars are enabling their European competitors to do business with Tito.

The Cavalry at Bay

IN ITS heyday, the U. S. Calvary was the finest ever produced by any nation. Some of the country's greatest military geniuses were cavalrymen. Gen. George Patton, mightiest offensive battle commander of World War II, came out of the Cavalry.

Today, the United States Army has no horse troops. But it still has cavalrymen—and in inner Army circles they are making the fight of their lives to preserve the name of their glory-studded service.

Led by doughboy Gen. Jacob Devers, a determined undercover drive is under way to wipe the name of Cavalry off Army rolls. Devers is retiring this fall but he seems bent on taking one last stag at the Cavalry before he bows out.

All the other traditional Army branches are being preserved intact. Where these branches are a part of an armored division, they are known as Armored Infantry, Armored Artillery, Armored Engineers, etc. But Devers and his doughboy coterie are furiously clamoring to abolish Armored Cavalry, the reconnaissance elements of an armored division.

Nepotism

REPRESENTATIVE J. PARNELL THOMAS (R., N. J.) has been under indictment for months on charges of taking kickbacks from his congressional employes. Trial of the former un-American Activities Committee chairman has been postponed repeatedly because of his sickness.

Practically all of this session Thomas has been absent from his office for this reason. But his family has been well represented on the congressional payroll.

Mrs. Amelia Thomas, his wife, is on the payroll for $2245.52 up to June 30. And Mrs. Lillian Thomas, his daughter-in-law, has drawn $577.50 so far this year.

In addition to his own $15,000 congressional pay and other emoluments, Thomas has received extensive medical and surgical care at the Army's Walter Reed Hospital at a nominal charge. He is a vigorous foe of the President's national health insurance program.

Deposit Insurance

THE American Bankers Association is quietly pressuring the Senate Banking Committee to slash the yearly assessment of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Banks pay the FDIC 1/12 of 1 per cent of their total insured deposits. Individual deposits are insured up to $5000. Last year, the FDIC received $119,000,000 in bank "premiums." The agency has $1,065,000,000 in its fund, which is accumulating interest at the rate of $25,000,000 a year.

Senator Burnet Maybank (D., S. C.), chairman of the Banking Committee, has indicated willingness to sponsor a bill to cut the assessment in half—if that met with the approval of Currency Comptroller Preston Delano. Delano is a director of the FDIC. Maybank has asked Delano for an opinion on the matter.

Some FDIC officials are strongly opposed to cutting the assessment. They contend it is no hardship on banks and is an added safeguard in current uncertain conditions.

Miscellaneous

SENATOR ARTHUR VANDENBERG has kept a voluminous diary throughout his Washington career. It will be the basis of the memoirs he plans to write when he retires at the conclusion of his term in 1952 . . . Congressional investigators are quietly checking the record and activities of Clem Whitaker, high-paid publicity man of the American Medical Association in its fight against the President's health insurance program . . . Gen. Lucius Clay, former United States commander in Germany, turned down the presidency of a national mail order company. Clay will go into the banking business in the fall.

Berlin Bow Won No 'Votes'

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

THE PROGRESS made at the Big Four conference in Paris came as good news to American voters. Whether it will overcome the long-term skepticism in this country regarding Russian motives remains to be seen.

A survey of American attitudes toward the Soviets taken right after the announcement of the lifting of the Berlin blockade in May and before the meeting in Paris, showed comparatively few voters believing that Russia really wants peace or that the Kremlin would cooperate with the Western world.

The lifting of the Berlin blockade by Russia, in the opinion of most voters expressing a view on the subject, was done because the blockade was a "losing proposition."

A substantial majority of voters questioned cling to the long-held view that Russia is trying to build herself up to be the ruling world power. Only about one voter in five in the survey thinks that the Russian government sincerely desires peace.

These attitudes were revealed in answers to a series of questions as follows:

"Do you think Russia will cooperate with us in world affairs?"

Tan's Merely Pretty

By Alton L. Blakeslee

Associated Press Science Reporter

NEW YORK, June 25.—That golden bronze sun tan is mainly just for looks. So far as health goes, a sun tan itself doesn't do much for you, say the experts. But, like lipstick for women, it helps morale.

You do get benefits while acquiring it. One is vitamin D, from the sun's action on your skin. Another may be the sun's effects in helping to clear up superficial skin ailments.

Other benefits come from the fresh air, fun and relaxation while getting the tan. After that, there's the psychological kick of looking tanned and fit. A tanned skin is perhaps healthier, says one authority, and appears more resistant to some infections. It also means you can stay out in the sun longer.

Only a small part of the sun's rays, the ultraviolet rays, do the work of giving you vitamin D, the sun tan, sunburn or freckles. The ultraviolet rays act on a substance, ergosterol, in the skin and transform it into the vitamin.

Sunburn is caused by the shorter ultraviolet rays. They break down tiny blood vessels just beneath the skin, resulting in tight red skin or burn. The mechanism is the same as a burn from the kitchen stove.

The longer ultraviolet rays don't cause any burn. They penetrate deeper into the skin. There they act on a pigment, melanin, and bring it to the surface as tan.

Protective Layer

A TAN makes the skin surface thicker and gives protection by making it harder for the short rays to burn. A burn, on the other hand, makes it harder for the tanning rays to get through to the layer of pigment below.

There are some sun tan lotions scientifically designed to help tanning while preventing sunburn. They screen out the short burning rays, but let the tanning rays through.

The heat you feel while basking in the sun comes from the infrared rays, which have nothing to do with either tanning or burning.

The best place to get a sunburn or sun tan is in the snow. There is less ultraviolet light in winter, but snow is the very best reflector of it, and what does get through becomes concentrated. Water is the second best reflector, and sand the third.

Many sunburn victims are fooled by cloudy days. They don't realize that just as much ultraviolet comes through clouds as through a clear sky.

If you're just starting out on acquiring your summer tan, most authorities advise you not to stay exposed, without protection, for more than 10 or 15 minutes the first day. That's the limit under a noonday sun.

There are people, heliophobes, who can't stand exposure to sunshine at all, or who can take it for only a few minutes. Others can stand much more than the average person—or think they can. And they contribute heavily to the 15 million cases of severe sunburn among Americans each summer.

Sex perversion in children as a cause of setting fires was discussed at the National Fire Protection Association meeting. E. M. Blanford, chief special agent, National Board of Fire Underwriters, said that sex perversion figured in more than 90 per cent of arson cases.

Blanford recommended that children with a penchant for playing with fire be examined by a competent physician or psychiatrist or at least be kept under close supervision.

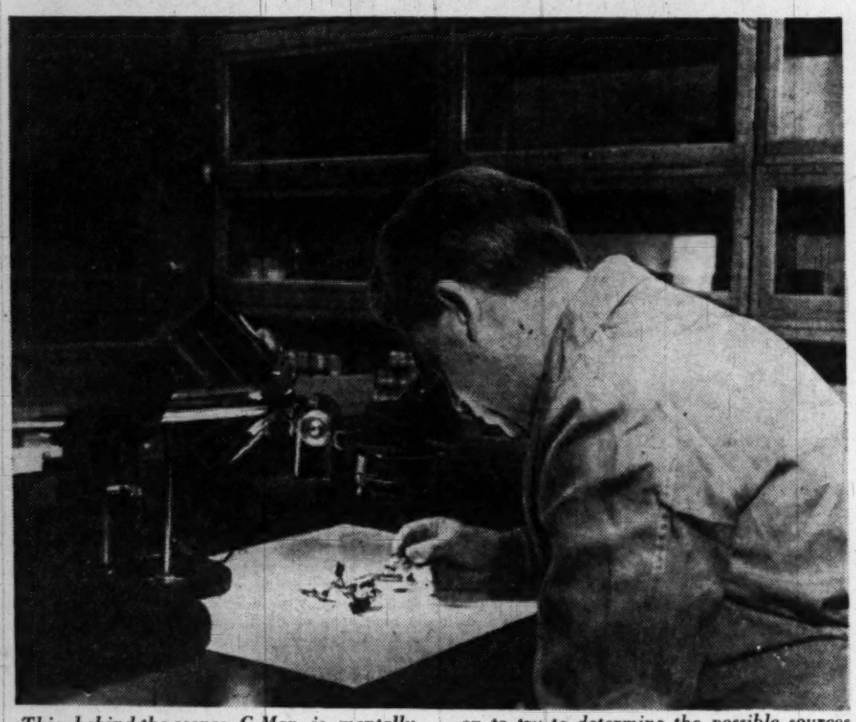
have a lot of confidence in the FBI. They rush to it with reports on all sorts of suspicious actions on the part of friends associates and neighbors. Actually, they were told to do so in wartime. Attorney General Biddle enjoined them to make no investigations and take no actions against the disloyal. "Tell it to the FBI," the people were told. And have they been telling it to the FBI? How well, only the weary agents know.

"Okeh, but why keep the stuff?" people now ask.

The same people would be the first to point out how they had warned against a foreign agent, a Communist or a crook, and the FBI had paid them no attention, if the flood of fact and fancy was indiscriminately dumped into the incinerator.



This behind-the-scenes G-Man is mentally reconstructing a bomb used in a killing from the few available fragments; then he will go on to try to determine the possible sources of the materials used. The FBI has built an iron-clad case from a grain of dust

Pattern Can Evolve

MOREOVER, this sort of mountain of miscellaneous gossip and rumor does have a certain usefulness.

Properly collated and appraised, it can tell an intelligence officer a great deal about the reliability of sources. The crackpot who has warned the FBI, over the past 20 years, of the Communist alliances of Presidents and Cabinet members is not likely to set off a Nation-wide manhunt when he bobs up with some lesser allegations.

Beyond this primary usefulness, the stray bits of volunteered information, over a period of years, may some day fall into the proper places and at last make up a believable and useful pattern of information. So it is smart to file all this stuff away. It is not just a magpie instinct that causes the FBI to hoard this sort of material.

"But they ought not let this undigested stuff ever get out of their hands!" people protest. And if the FBI had its way, such stuff never would see the light of a day. The unevaluated and undigested mass of information contained in miscellaneous complaints did not get out of the FBI until the Coplon case.

It was not always guarded as carefully as it has been in recent years. But the precautions against the premature disclosure of such tidbits have been steadily increased. Greater security is required by reason of international tension and by reason of the greater damage that any such disclosures do to an individual in time of such excited interest in and hysteria about espionage. So the FBI has become more and more careful.

If any Government agency, including the loyalty boards and Civil Service agencies, asks the FBI if it has any information about old Joe Doaks, it will get a cautious answer. The files may bulge with the vindictive assertions of neighbors who did not like Joe's spite fence. But unless agents have had time to investigate the complaints, the FBI answer will be: "We never have investigated him."

While this is the policy of the FBI, some Government officials and employes fear there have been deviations from it and think uninvestigated complaints have got into the hands of the loyalty boards. This is disputed by Loyalty Board officials. They say that while the FBI has refused to submit evaluations or judgments on the conclusions to be reached from investigations, it has not turned over miscellaneous reports of wrong-doing without investigation.

That's why the Coplon documents horrified the FBI. They contained just the sort of scrappy, incomplete, uninvestigated miscellany that can do most damage to individuals and expose to the worst security risks confidential informants.

The very incompleteness of the files made them more dangerous. In some cases, entire files relating to the individuals referred to in single documents, by their inherent contradictions, even without summarization, might have cleared up the appearance of wrongdoing conveyed by bits and pieces of files. From this point of view, the court-conducted excursion into the morgue could not have had worse results.

It is difficult to maintain air-tight security in an organization of thousands of employes. Over the years, there have been some FBI leaks, some breaches of the tight discipline that the organization would like to maintain. Individuals have let their enthusiasm run away with their judgment and sometimes have talked privately to their friends. Unevaluated material has shown up in some congressional hearings. Some of the questions asked at hearings of the Committee on Un-American Affairs seem to be a little more informed than mere shots in the dark. They have caused some misgivings. Still, the record is a good one.

Specific Exceptions

THERE are some clearly defined exceptions under which absolutely unappraised complaints are officially passed on to other Government agencies.

If the FBI gets an allegation of counterfeiting, for example, the complaint goes straight to Treasury. If it gets a charge of naval sabotage, it is dispatched to ONI. If an Army officer is accused of irregularity, unless the material is relevant to some existing FBI case, it goes on over to G-2. It was in this manner that an anonymous letter about Benny Meyers went straight to Air Force officers. Otherwise, there has been no release without some investigation and evaluation.

Now that the court has put an end to this policy, what is there to do?

Can Congress devise a statute that will seal up this unevaluated information? Is it possible to lay down a general rule as to what the FBI must divulge, either to executive agencies, to Congress or to the court? Can Congress define what the FBI must withhold? And even if Congress does the job, can anyone be sure that another judge, in the name of the rights of some defendant, will not pry open the new legislative barn door and let some more FBI horses out of the barn?

The classic stages of the intelligence operation may offer some clew to legislative action. Ahead of the military intelligence functional breakdowns, in the case of the FBI, comes the stage of the complaint.

Highest Secrecy

"THE Complaint" stage certainly must be the stage of highest secrecy and most complete security. This is the precase stage when there often is nothing at hand but the ill-formed suspicions of citizens or officials. An open file here exposes informants to danger, tips off suspects to activities, circulates rumors and gossip and scandal about persons who may be innocent of any wrong-doing. The more critical the times, the more important that confidential security be maintained at this stage.

"The Collection Stage" is the next interlude. At this stage, there has been at least enough scrutiny of a swatch of complaints to prompt someone to assign an agent to look into the matter and gather the facts. The broadening file at this point may begin to fatten up with reports of agents, correspondence from part-time informants or special sources.

The entire file, with the complementary and conflicting scraps of information, still is an undigested mass at the end of the collection stage, but, at least, the raw material of a completed report is at hand. Still, the patently false and the obviously malicious matter have not been screened out. Release of the file, at this stage, would be dangerous to individuals who are innocent, and in the case of guilty individuals, it would be dangerous to Government agents and to security.

"The Collation Stage" brings all of this material before the eyes of experts who attempt to piece it together. At this juncture, one informant cancels out another; one bit of information offsets another bit; a picture of the credibility of the testimony begins to emerge; a conception of the reliability of witnesses begins to form. The risks of disclosure are diminishing, but they have not yet disappeared.

"The Evaluation Stage" brings the intelligence organization to its final phase of action. At this juncture, what it believes to be the facts emerge from the morass of assembled material. The report that finally is compiled at this level now gives a rounded picture of the whole case.

Such a report, it is apparent, might be properly disseminated within the Justice Department and even to other governmental agencies directly concerned, say in loyalty cases. It could properly form the basis for decisions to prosecute for law violations or the foundation of decisions to proceed in loyalty investigations.

Could the report at this stage properly go to congressional committees? Would it be appropriate to furnish it intact to courts of law where the information involved is relevant to a prosecution or defense? Would it be right to make it public in loyalty proceedings? Would it be safe to constitute it as a public record?

The problem is complicated by the variable nature of the documents involved even at this stage. The FBI is not constituted to reach final conclusions, pass final judgments, pronounce decisions of guilty or not guilty. At the very last level of the FBI's operation, the file contains material that points toward conclusions of guilt but also, under the explicit instructions of the FBI to its agents, it contains all the material that points to the innocence of the person or persons involved.

Many Further Steps

IN THE parlance of military intelligence, the next and final step in the operation would be the dissemination of the collected, collated and evaluated material.

In our system of justice, however, there are many further steps. The FBI reports form the basis of decisions by the Department of Justice, by district attorneys and by grand juries, but they are not, in themselves, even decisions to prosecute or not to prosecute. Agents are expressly enjoined not to make such recommendation. After the decision of the prosecuting agency, comes the court action itself.

Once the case actually is in court, how far back into the intelligence operation may the court reach? Can it lay before the jury the FBI report itself, the collation study, the collection material and the complaints? Where must it stop if its policies are to protect (1) the rights of the accused; (2) the security of the Government; (3) the safety of agents who risk their lives to gather information; (4) promises to confidential sources; (5) future efficiency of the FBI and other intelligence agencies?

It seems perfectly clear that it cannot and should not ever go behind the evaluated reports, as it did in the Coplon case. It is doubtful if it ought to reach into even the evaluated reports so long as the prosecution makes no effort to rest its case on undisclosed material (and the court surely can protect defendants against incrimination by any material not put directly before the jury).

Can the limits of this accessibility be defined in laws?

That is the current problem of the Government. Probably the limits can be defined more clearly than they are now. How can you prove that a spy stole secret documents without divulging the secrets in the documents that were stolen? That is the Justice Department's dilemma. Until the FBI has an answer, it is in the position of the unfortunate honey bee. It can't sting an enemy without committing suicide.

Russ Policy Is Unchanged

those collaborating with the new "Catholic Action."

The process of "consolidation" continued in the United States as well as in the Soviet sphere, but there remained significant differences. In the United States, for example, repression, far from being an instrument of Government policy, received very little Government support. President Truman, indeed, characterized the agitation as "hysteria."

Moreover, many Americans clung to the notion that the main business of a free society was to preserve freedom; and their increasing indignation began to set limits on the campaign against unpopular ideas. Senator Bourke Hickenlooper's trial of David Lilienthal was fast becoming David Lilenthal's trial of Hickenlooper.

The attempt of the staff of the House Un-American Activities Committee to launch an investigation of college textbooks met the resistance of most university administrations and finally won the shamefaced, if not very convincing, repudiation of the staff by the committee itself. In the meantime, the Harvard Corporation spoke for many universities in a vigorous statement on academic freedom, opposing any "harassment of professors" or systems of "detection and trial" of the political beliefs of faculty members.

The Magazine Rack

By Katherine Graham

IN THE HILLS behind Marseilles, France, police burst into an old hunting lodge to surprise counterfeiter Louis Bertillo turning out a brand new bunch of $20 Federal Reserve notes. Under sacks of chicken feed, police found two million dollars in high-grade American counterfeit. The story is told in Readers Digest by Frederic Sondern, jr., condensed from American Mercury.

"The age-old business of counterfeiting United States money, once almost entirely a domestic problem, has become international since the war's end," says the author. Since the dollar is the favorite security of the harassed European, he explains, international racketeers are encouraged. Domestic counterfeiting is on the upgrade, too.

Also in the Digest is the absorbing tale of a Wisconsin man, one of the few people in the world who know the ancient art of working bloodhounds. His dogs have tracked down murderers and escaped lunatics as well as wandering children and lost campers. How they do it is told by Daniel P. Mannix, originally in the Saturday Evening Post.

In a more serious vein is William Hard and Andre Visson's recommendation of an economic alliance to supplement the military alliance now established under the North Atlantic Pact.

"I HATE baseball," says sourpuss Andrew A. Rooney in Pageant. Rooney, who complains about the distant sound of all-afternoon broadcasts, and dinner-time score announcements, claims he is one of a downtrodden minority who will one day rise.

"Some day," he promises, "one of us will be President. That will be our time. Our President will return his free pass with a nasty note. He will refuse to throw out the first ball."

"Patients are people," declares Zulma Steele, but hospital authorities treat them like unruly children, she adds. Hospitals have their own problems, she concedes, but as surgical technique grows ever more flawless, medical manners grow more and more terrible, she contends.

Television-wise moppets will love the howdy-doody picture sequence on manners.

TO CONTINUE with the pocket-size magazines, John W. White in Coronet tells how "The Mosquito Meets His Match." Phonograph recordings have been made of the female mating call. When the boys answer the call, they fly "into a suicidal screen charged with high voltage electricity."

Theory behind this weird experiment is that the disease-bearing female mosquitoes can be eliminated if innocuous males are prevented from fertilizing eggs.

Despite the arguments about polls, "marketing research" continues to thrive and influence million-dollar industries, says Robert P. Brundage in "The Quiz Key to Our Future." Finding out what America wants, whether it be in vacuum cleaners, breakfast foods or labor relations, is one of the Nation's booming businesses. Commercial polls rarely attempt to predict, are content to evaluate past and present facts and attitudes.

"BEST STORIES from Liberty," just out, makes 100 pages of vacation reading. Authors include Paul Gallico, Budd Schulberg, Faith Baldwin, Franklin P. Adams and Corey Ford.

HOLIDAY features "Wisconsin," written by Author Mark Schorer, who hails from there and who set his first two novels in Wisconsin. Milwaukee is dubbed by Eli Waldron the "Comfortable City," the city of "overstuffed chair and big bosom, the unhurried pedestrian and the easygoing cop." At the same time Milwaukee is capable of going into a frenzy when aroused, as it was a few years ago by a wild duck, Gertie, about to become a mother, who built a nest atop a piling below the Wisconsin ave. bridge, busiest spot in town. Then, says Waldron, the city was reduced to a mass of blubbering cretins.

The usual array of brilliant writing talent fills out the book—Ernest Hemingway describes the thrill of fishing in the "Great Blue River," Vincent Sheean writes on Benares—Holy City, A. J. Liebling on the French Line and Tony Robin on "Fashions for the Road."

OTHER HINTS for an auto vacation trip are contained in the American Motorist, which tells you where to go—"Northwestward Ho!" and "An Inexpensive Summer Vacation"—and what to wear when you get there.

IN THE Saturday Evening Post is Ensign Wesley A. Brown's own story. The first Negro ever to graduate from Annapolis tells about his four years there. Arthur W. Baum profiles H. J. Heinz II, young head of the food firm.

The magic number, 57, incidentally, was a bit of Heinz concoction. Baum relates that Grandfather Heinz was struck by a shoe advertisement offering 21 styles. He began counting the varieties of his own product, which were even then over 60. But when he passed 57 "he recognized in it a potent, slightly mystic, easily remembered number."

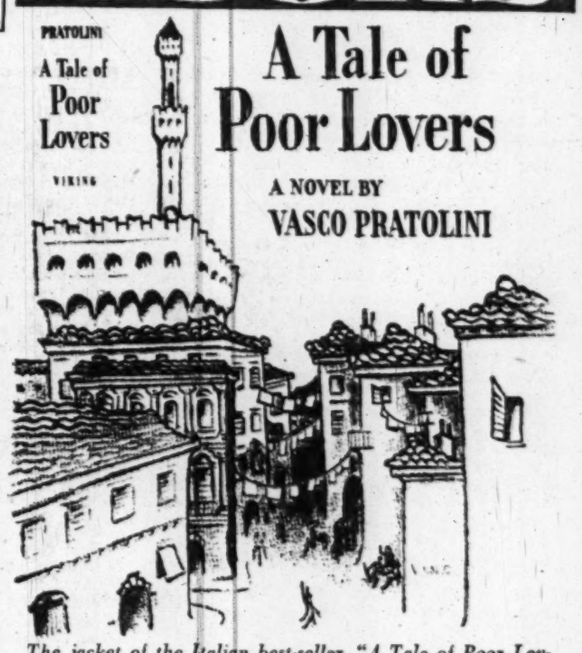
EDWARD R. STETTINIUS, JR., tells why he thinks Big Three relations deteriorated after the Yalta Pact, in Look. Marshal Stalin returned to Moscow, according to the former Secretary of State, to find that certain members of the Politburo felt that the Soviet Union had been sold out, that Stalin had made too many concessions to the Western world, and that was why he had to hedge on his agreements.

Look also recommends to young people 10 rules for behavior in courtship. There's a story, too, on Kiwanis.

BOOKS



The jacket of the Italian best-seller, "A Tale of Poor Lovers," by Vasco Pratolini

A New Decameron

Italian Best-Seller Is a Teeming Novel

A TALE OF POOR LOVERS. By Vasco Pratolini. Viking. 369 pp. $3.50.

THE 54 characters of this seething drama of the Via del Corno in Florence might have been painted by Breughel the Elder or Hogarth. But if painters of the Lowlands or London should not suffice, they might also have stepped from the notebooks of Leonardo the Florentine.

The time is the mid-1920s. The characters range from a covey of Communists (ah so pure) to a skulk of Fascists (ah so wicked), not forgetting a gaggle of streetwalkers (poor things) and a flight of Guardian Angels (beautiful and ill-fated).

Absolute evil is epitomized by the Signora, an ancient and wealthy former prostitute who hates all men. Absolute virtue lurks in Corrado Maciste, as admirable a blacksmith as ever graced a poem by Longfellow. Between these two extremes struggle and strive and dream various barbers and cobblers and chefs and pimps, three thieves, a fruit vender and a traveling salesman, widows and wives and mistresses and temporary virgins, but particularly several pairs of poor young lovers.

Plots Galore

PLOTS for 20 novels are interwoven into this Florentine tapestry. There is the picaresque tragedy of Giulio Solli, who leaves the 400,000 lira swag with Egisto Nesi, the coal dealer and fence, then goes to jail, leaving his wife to become the companion of the Signora and later the mistress of Otello, who hates but is fascinated by his sadistic father, the aforementioned coal dealer.

There are the love stories of the four girls known as the Guardian Angels of the Via del Corno. And few girls of this Florentine street come to their wedding day as virgins.

There is the struggle between the Fascists and the anti-Fascists which touches almost every life on the street and gives new reason in the reader's mind for hating Mussolini and his pistol-packing bullies.

And on every page and in every sentence there is evidence that:

"There is so much good in the worst of us,
And so much bad in the best of us,
That it hardly becomes any of us
To talk about the rest of us."

Classic Violence

HIGH moments in this leading Italian best seller include the violent scene in which the Signora loses her voice and goes berserk, and the women of the street see her apartment for the first time while the ancient hetaera smashes her objets d'art; the moonlight chase in which Fascist murderers finally kill one and wound another of our heroes; various holidays, including one in which the poor cuckold, Bettino, is celebrated with satirical verses and half-friendly catcalls and effigies; and finally the 30-kilometer flight on foot of two of the poor young lovers, which nevertheless ends next day in tragedy.

Pratolini is currently the toast of his country. His is the most widely popular novel of postwar Italy. To understand what the Italians have experienced, how they live, and what they think about the world, read "A Tale of Poor Lovers" which, in its way, is the Decameron of our era.—S. N.

Railroads Are People

GRANGER COUNTRY. Edited by Lloyd Lewis and Stanley Pargellis. Little, Brown. 226 pp. Ill. $5.

RAILROADS are not only tracks but the land and the people they serve, and "Granger Country, a Pictorial History of the Burlington Railroad," in recognizing this fact presents an attractive segment of Americana.

The Burlington, which observes its centennial February 12, runs through Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Texas and at least parts of six other States.

Something of the development of these States, as well as the development of railroading itself, is brought out. Not only are there pictures of early locomotives and bridges, and the men who ran the trains, but pictures of the early settlers and towns.

The feel of the prairie in the days of Indians and buffalo, sod houses and cattle drives, and of the grain elevators, oil, dude ranches and street evangelists of today, has been caught in this book.

Greek 'Pioneers' Eager to Fight Old Comrades

were professional singers when they got here."

When we climbed into the truck which was to take us to the First Battalion's camp, I was told, "Now you'll see the man who converts more Communists than any of them." This was Maj. Andreas Vassilopoulos, battalion commandant. Vassilopoulos was a Communist himself once. The British had him behind barbed wire for nine months. Now the Communists have a price on his head. The more hard-bitten guerillas are taken to him for conversion.

"He knows all the Communist tricks, you see," my interpreter told me. "He appeals to filotimo. He says, 'All right, so you're a Communist, are you? Ho! Well, I was a commissar, a capitania, and I could make my own laws. But I got over all that. First I'm a Greek, and so are you. You may keep those Slavic leaders' pictures in your tents if you wish to. Keep Stalin's there, for all I care. This is a free camp, not a dictatorship. But tell me just one thing. Aren't you a little ashamed to be here while other Greeks are fighting for Greece, for all of us Greeks?'"

Then my interpreter added, "That's filotimo, see? But nobody but a Greek can know what it really means."

As we bumped over the 3 kilometers, the precise distance between each camp, I learned that Vassilopoulos has released more men to the National Army than either of the other two battalion commandants.

Again, a sun-drenched, village-like camp out of which came hundreds of laughing, singing men to meet the truck. Again that synchronization that sounds like a college football yell—"We want arms."

Could these be the same men who, a short time ago, were shouting, "EAM! EAM! EAM!?" Many of them were. They'd been members of EPON, the youth organization which caused so much of what Greeks call "the big confusion," and which makes the average Greek very wary about any youth organization, including one or two sponsored by their government.

Heading the care-free-looking mob was Vassilopoulos, who is a dead ringer for the late Douglas Fairbanks, sr. Lithe, medium height, open-necked shirt, gold-crested beret, he jauntily swung a British swagger stick.

The entrance to the First Battalion tent area is guarded by two stone lions. They were sculptured by the son of a former Greek minister who went through his political metamorphosis at Makronissos. On either side of the main tent street are miniatures, the work of various Pioneers, representing Greek history—St. Sophia's Cathedral, the Parthenon, a monastery in Crete where monks killed themselves rather than submit to the enemy—all calculated to instill filotimo.

In the mess hall, an enormous painting of Christ the Shepherd was flanked by portraits of King Paul and Queen Frederika. An officer told me that this petite, German-born queen and handsome King Paul are genuinely admired by all Greeks.

"Thinking Greeks, no matter what they suffered," he said, "voted for the King's party because we learned the hard way how difficult it is to get rid of Communists—and we know how easy it will be to change our political setup after the Communist menace is over."

While we ate to the music of this battalion's special chorus, band and soloists, Vassilopoulos told me that athletics in the three camps include water polo, football and basketball, and competition between the three battalions would impress "even sports editors of your American sports pages."

After luncheon we went to the Third Battalion camp, which has a 75-watt radio station, built by Pioneers and staffed by competent-looking script writers, actors and commentators. Here, too, is published a 40-page newspaper, Pioneers of Makronissos, which is put out by a staff selected from the three battalions.

9000 at the Front

NOW then, this is all very well, but just what has Makronissos actually accomplished? What are the figures under the heading, "Redeemed?"

One of the most difficult things for a Greek to do is to get down to figures. It took me three days, and I insisted that an authority of the War Ministry sign for them.

King Paul (left), whose picture has a rare place of honor in one of the Makronissos mess halls, and War Minister Kanelopoulos get the "Zhto!" (Long live) treatment from a group of the Pioneers. They seem to be enjoying the manhandling

In the two years since Makronissos opened, 27,000 Pioneers have sojourned on the island. Of these, 9000 soldiers who might otherwise be in concentration camps or prisons have been released to the Greek National Army and are fighting against guerillas with whom they once at least sympathized. Released to their homes and occupations are 6000 civilians.

At present, Makronissos has 7000 soldiers, 4500 civilians and 200 in a category marked, "Still completely impenitent."

A Pioneer is deemed honestly converted when of his own volition he goes to his commandant and asks to confess his crimes or errors against Greece. Sometimes it takes 15 months, sometimes 5, sometimes just a few days.

The confessions vary in character. Some youths simply wrote, "Zhto (long live) Zachariades," on walls in Athens. Some joined the guerillas because they were told they'd be promoted in rank. Others, from central Greece, Samos, the Peloponnesus, say something like this: "Well, I confess I just didn't like things as they are. The government doesn't pay any attention to anyone except those who live in Athens. I thought anything would be better for my family than what we were going through. But now I realize that communism is far from the answer."

Leaves Are Granted

AS soon as a man has confessed and signed his declaration renouncing Communist ideology, he is entitled to a 48-hour leave every fortnight. Moreover, a Pioneer whose family is in dire need may apply for a month's leave to work in Lavrion or in Athens to augment the family income. During this time he is not required to report, but security police follow his activities to some extent.

"If they're from the mountains, far away, I let them build up a long leave," Vassilopoulos told me. "Then I just say to them, 'Drop me a line and tell me how you're doing.' It's the honor system, and it works."

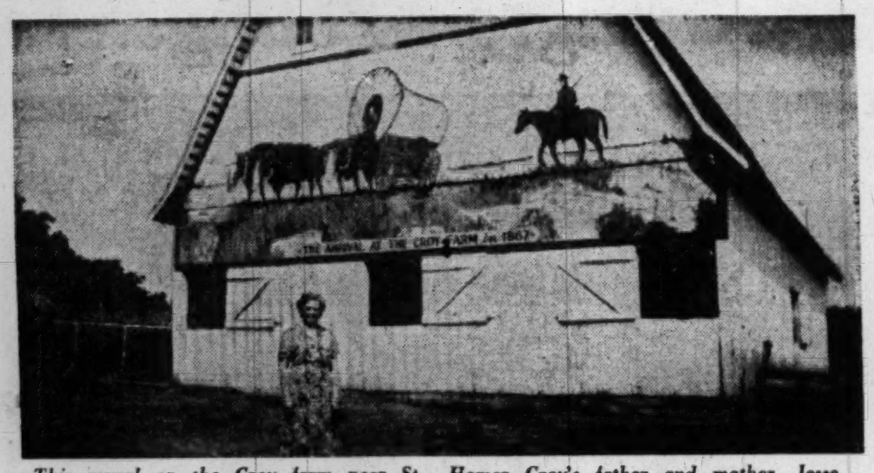
The length of time a soldier stays at camp after his signed declaration depends upon how much military training he's had. Civilians are sent home immediately after their confessions have been deemed to be honest, but their names are sent to the Minister of Security and transmitted to authorities in the released Pioneer's village. It has been found that even those whose conversion is doubtful behave like good citizens after sojourning at Makronissos. At least, thus far none has ever been found to work against Greece again.

I saw some of these civilians on the road to the caique landing—old men, middle-aged men, young boys, all in shabby clothes, ambling along toward a mess set up for them near the sea. No eager hands tearing at khaki caps in welcome, no song from these.

They had just been brought in from a mop-up of guerillas. Perhaps they thought no one cared whether they repented. Perhaps they themselves cared less, for here at least was food. Time enough for conversion after a few 3000-calorie meals.

A Complex Personality

The Hymn-Singing Jesse James



This mural on the Croy farm near St. Joseph, Mo., shows the arrival at the farm of Homer Croy's father and mother. Jesse James hid out near the farm

By Sterling North

JESSE JAMES WAS MY NEIGHBOR. By Homer Croy. Duell, Sloan & Pearce. 313 pp. $3.50

WHEN I was a small boy in the Midwest, we used to sing:

Jesse had a wife
Will mourn all her life.
The children they will rave;
'Twas a dirty little coward
That killed Mr. Howard
And laid Jesse James in his grave.

Long before we heard of Henry and William James, most of us knew about Frank and Jesse (no relation), who were reputed to be American Robin Hoods who stole from the rich to give to the poor.

It was some years later when I discovered by my own casual research that the glamorous legend was mostly nonsense and that Frank and Jesse were hard-hearted killers, victims, it is true, of the ferocious guerilla warfare of the 1860s, and to a lesser degree pardonable because the banks and railroads were squeezing the life blood out of the Missouri frontier in the hard post-Civil War years.

Homer Croy has tried not to glamorize the James boys. But since he owns a big Missouri farm on which the robbers sometimes hid, knew Frank and is a good friend of the upright Jesse James, jr., he finds it difficult to be censorious.

Virtue Was Difficult

JESSE'S stepfather was tortured by the Yankees. Jesse, who rode with Quantril, was shot down in cold blood as he rode in after the end of the war to surrender. He and his brother Frank at various times tried to go straight. But farming was hard after the war, money scarce and feeling still ran high.

Homer Croy says that the bank robbery at Liberty, Mo., on February 13, 1866, which netted a gang including Frank James $62,000, was "the first bank robbery in America." He must be discounting as an act of war the robberies performed by Morgan's Raiders. He is certainly correct, however, in saying that there had been at least a score of train robberies before the James boys began their career of pulling up tracks, wrecking trains and filling their grain sacks with loot.

The author has done the most careful job in print of checking the almost day-by-day activities of the gang. He has interviewed every important living source of information as well as contemporary newspaper reports, Pinkerton records and other data.

Clung to Religion

BUT exciting as this freshly gathered material is, Croy's greatest contribution is his analysis of the highly complex character of Jesse, who was very religious, sang hymns, prayed for himself and his brother, was a gentle and faithful husband, a loving father and, in all except his major occupation, an honest man.

Sons of a father who was an early minister and educator and of a big, strapping, fearless, convent-bred mother, Jesse turned to the Bible and Frank to Shakespeare for consolation. In a different era, they would have been highly respected citizens.

Croy has tried hard to find a few Robin Hood acts of generosity and mercy on the part of the boys and has, in fact, dug up one or two. But for the most part it must be admitted that they were tough and merciless when riding, robbing and killing.

Good Americana by a writer who handles his material with warm local color and earthy humor.

A Ray of Sunlight

When Fuel Runs Out, We Can Harness Sol

OUR SUN. By Donald H. Menzel. Doubleday. 326 pp. $4.50.

DON'T tell the Un-American Affairs Committee about it, but the sun has been emitting incredible quantities of atomic energy for billions of years. Like rain, it falls on the just and the unjust, the democracies and the dictatorships.

The value of this energy in terms of the current minimum cost of electrical power is about $300 per day per acre. If it could be captured economically for human use, we could immediately stop worrying about the fact that our oil will be exhausted in 20 years and our coal in perhaps 3000.

Donald H. Menzel believes that, out of sheer necessity, we will ultimately develop efficient sun motors. Already solar heating systems are proving semi-practical in such sunny climes as Florida and California, the principal difficulty being the storing of heat for cloudy days.

Dr. Menzel thinks that before we have mastered the sun motor we will make great use of an indirect source of solar energy, the wind. He predicts that huge windmills in the Rocky Mountain States eventually will attract much heavy industry westward.

As for sunspots: Don't buy stocks or grain on the unproven assumption that they go up and down with the frequency of the atomic tornadoes on the sun's surface. Any such prophetic revelations made by market tipsters are untrustworthy, to state it mildly.

It is true, however, that sunspot cycles affect our weather, our radio reception and the growing season. Some remarkable correlations have been discovered between the growth rings of ancient trees and this intriguing solar phenomenon.

"Our Sun" is a little volume on a big subject which should prove fascinating to any intelligent layman. Most of the mathematical formulas have been reduced to their simplest and most abbreviated form, and can be skipped if necessary by readers who have nonmathematical minds.

If you want to take your mind off our own infinitesimal worries, spend a few hours contemplating the source of this planet's heat, light and life itself, the glowing star which, each morning as though by miracle, renews our hope and our very chance for continued existence.

One day without the sun and we would cease to worry about four-power conferences or the present recession. Ten days without the fiery ball and all life would cease to exist on our entire globe.

To use understatement, this is a book on a fundamental subject.—S. N.

Liebling Sifts, Flays and Slugs

A. J. Liebling snips and slashes away at the press again in "Mink and Red Herring." The above impression is by Jacob Burck after Rembrandt's "Anatomy Lesson," and is used through the courtesy of the Chicago Newspaper Guild

MINK AND RED HERRING: More Journalistic Adventure With the "Wayward Press Man." By A. J. Liebling. Doubleday. 251 pp. $2.95.

HEADLINE WRITERS love violent verbs such as "Slug," "Hit," "Fight," "Tackle," "Lambaste" and "Flay." But after sifting Liebling's probe of the wayward American press, we discover that nothing makes A. J. want to slug, hit, lambaste and flay like that pernicious word "Probe."

Six times in three pages of the World-Telegram he found that word, once in the following incomprehensible context: "Green Asks Firing of Probe Slugger." Try sifting that one!

On such minor matters, Liebling is quite a prober. He is a highly amusing and often informative critic of the eccentricities, willful evasions, slanted attitudes, editorialized news stories and other perversions of the rightful functions of journalism. That he is far less critical of newsgathering that agrees with his own political bias may be seen from his continuous praise of PM.

Wallace's Mite

LIEBLING is certainly well within his right when he criticizes the American press for its fantastic fumble on the last election. The average editor should feel about as happy as the pollsters for the part he played in "booting" the biggest story of the year. But what did Liebling expect in the coverage of the Wallace campaign? Daily bouquets of roses for the Communist Party's candidate who dribbled in with a pitiful one million votes?

Liebling very rightly is shocked by the fact that the State of Mississippi was able to create a virtual Gestapo, a secret police force answerable only to the Governor, created primarily to smash a transit strike. He flays, hits, slugs and lambastes the AP and the UP for their incredible laxity in reporting the rise of such a dangerously reactionary OGPU.

But to write a really objective book on our press, he would have to balance that story with the continuous distortions to be found in every column of the Daily Worker—a paper he seldom even mentions.

Light Reading

LIEBLING will find many rooters for his attack on Pegler and his discussion of the Thomas Committee and its uncritical claque. I like his "probe" of the space given to such stories as royal weddings, men being fed through tubes to the stomach, the poll of women dancing teachers on the 10 most eligible bachelors, various sensational crime stories and other relative ephemera. He is right when he hits, lambastes and flays cheap, yellow journalism.

But what he fails to mention even when he goes briefly abroad to criticize the press of France and of England is that we still have the most free and honest press in the world today. As a practicing journalist of 20 years' standing, for instance (having written for some 34 different papers), I have never once had a line deleted because it disagreed with the politics of the publisher.

Try sifting Pravda, Mr. Liebling, and give a probe to Izvestia. We aren't really so bad.

Notes on the Margin

By Lee Grove

"ANNA AND THE KING OF SIAM" has been translated into 15 foreign languages; 771,000 copies have been sold in American editions and it has just gone into a Pocket Book edition.

"Never Dies the Dream," a 120,000 word novel laid in Siam, is running currently as a 48,000-word serial in McCall's.

A fine time, you might say, for the author, Margaret Landon of 4711 Fulton st. nw., to be "fed up with writing." But Mrs. Landon, wife of Kenneth Landon, assistant chief of the State Department's Division of Southeast Asian Affairs, and the mother of four children, says she is exhausted from writing all winter and spring and is vacation-minded.

"I am such a slow writer," she explains, "I rewrite sometimes as many as 25 times."

Mrs. Landon has taken the title of her new book, due from Doubleday in December, from a poem by Dana Burnet. The lines read: "The dreamer dies, but never dies the dream."

6 Volumes in One

ALSO tired from writing and vacation-minded is Prof. Ralph L. Rusk of Columbia University. Rusk, whose biography of Ralph Waldo Emerson was brought out a few weeks ago by Scribner's, was in town with Mrs. Rusk to visit his sister, Mrs. Fern Shapley, curator of paintings at the National Gallery of Art.

Rusk, a serene and youthful looking man who has made a great contribution to the history of American literature not only through his own writings but also as a teacher, said he had no immediate plans for further writing. Referring to his six-volume edition of Emerson's letters, published in 1939, he said: "I may get out a seventh volume, but if so, it will be some years hence."

Of his new biography, he said he worked and worked to avoid overwriting. "There is a line, it seems to me, beyond which it is disastrous to go. If the writing is the least bit overdone, it is going to repel on second reading."

He actually had enough material for a six-volume biography, he said, but thought no one would read a work that long. As it was, he cut a large amount from the present book in manuscript.

Ah, Existentialism

NOT so many weeks ago a girl wandered around the Francis Scott Key Book Shop in Georgetown and finally selected a copy of Jean Paul Sartre's "Nausea," a New Directions book.

"Do you want it wrapped?" she was asked.

MARGARET LANDON
. . . Vacation-minded

"Hmmm, I guess so."

"Would you like it gift-wrapped."

"Hmmm, yes."

"Is it by any chance a Mother's Day gift?"

"Ummhmmm, yes."

Speaking of the book shop, it, appropriately, has a framed copy of "The Star Spangled Banner" in Key's handwriting. For a long time the manuscript was hung out in the center of the shop. No one ever paid any attention to it. Then one day the manuscript was hung on the obscure end of a bookcase. Now, human nature being what it is, everyone cranes his neck to look at it.

Two Bicentennial Volumes

Goethe's Words Reveal the Man

GOETHE'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY, Poetry and Truth From My Own Life. Translated by R. O. Moon. Public Affairs Press. 700 pp. $5.

GOETHE'S WORLD as Seen in Letters and Memoirs. Edited by Berthold Biermann. New Directions. 426 pp. $5.

IN OBSERVANCE of the 200th anniversary of Johann Wolfgang von Goethe's birth, distinguished men of letters and music are participating in the convocation and music festival starting tomorrow at Aspen, Colo.

On Friday, the Library of Congress will open an exhibit, including material from the Goethe Museum at Franfurt-am-Main lent for the first time in its history.

Yale, the University of Chicago, New York University, Hunter College and other institutions are also scheduling celebrations of the bicentennial.

The man being honored has been called, with the retrospect of a more complex age, "the last universal man." He has also been called "the first modern man." Deep and involved cases can be argued for either viewpoint.

Let Yourselves Go

THE best answer to this, and to much else that will be said in the ensuing weeks, is to be found in Goethe's own words, although he was speaking of his fellow Germans. To his semi-Boswell, Johann Eckermann, he said:

"The Germans are really queer people. By their profound thoughts and ideas, which they seek everywhere and thrust in everywhere, they make life much more burdensome than is necessary.

"Why don't you have the courage for once to give yourselves up to impressions, let yourselves be delighted, let yourselves be moved, let yourselves be uplifted, nay, let yourselves be instructed and encouraged to something great; but do not go on thinking that everything is in vain if it is not abstract thought and idea."

The celebrations Goethe would have taken calmly. Of his birth, August 28, 1749, he said: "The position of the stars was favorable; the sun was in the sign of Virgo and had reached its zenith; Jupiter and Venus were friendly, Mercury not in opposition; the Moon alone, just full, exerted her power of reflection all the more as she had entered her planetary hour. She was therefore in opposition to my birth, which could not come about until this hour was past."

Liked the Ladies

THE quotation is from R. O. Moon's translation of Goethe's autobiography, "Dichtung und Wahrheit," which Goethe completed in 1831, the year before his death. In it Goethe not only related those experiences which he considered most significant in his development, but something of himself as a person, including his lifelong pleasure in women.

The autobiography, the first translation to appear in many years, is a warm and human document written at a time when romanticism was in the air, and if men did not always reveal themselves fully, at least they were not stuffed shirts.

Admirably complementing it is Berthold Biermann's "Goethe's World," a collection of quotations from Goethe's own writings and the writings of others about him. A well-chosen anthology, it tells much about Goethe not to be found in the autobiography, and is remarkably rich in pictures.

Each book deserves a place on the shelf. Each can be read with the delight and uplift of which the author of "Faust" spoke.—L. G.

Nutshell Reviews of New Books

ANGELS CAMP. By Ray Morrison. Norton. $3.

LEO ZUBIAT, a San Francisco street urchin, is sent up for a $28 robbery. At a reform camp in the mountains he meets a counselor, Mr. Grozier, who works on his better instincts. He also meets camp mates like Gras, Mophead, Steamboat and Roo. Good and Evil wrestle and produce a series of morals, which are worked out by a runaway truck, a plane crash, a murder, a big-hearted movie director, two straying girls and one lost woman. Despite the action, this novel reads like a Rescue Mission tract.

RAY MORRISON

THE AMAZING ENGLISH. By Ranjee Shahani. Distributed by MacMillan. 158 pp. $2.50.

DR. SHAHANI, an Indian, indulges in that popular pastime, dissecting English character. He writes with shrewd observation and good humor on a variety of topics. Among other things, he notes that the English are not very good spellers, they do not make women's hats but lids for the head, suffer fools easily, and are poor autobiographers but good biographers.

MISSOURI LAWYER. By John T. Barker. Dorrance. 391 pp. $3.50.

JOHN T. BARKER, special assistant to the Attorney General and resident of Wardman Park Hotel, has written a kindly, informative autobiography. He recalls that he swam the wide Missouri as a boy and that he is said to have been the only man ever bitten by Man O' War. He recalls, too, the Union Station Massacre at Kansas City in 1933 and other murders and murder trials. William Rockhill Nelson and Thomas J. Pendergast, and he has something to say about Aaron Burr and the James boys, with a yawn. Now Mrs. Underwood expects her reporters to be as good as she was. They'll have to go some.

O. HUGE ANGEL. By Howard Baer. Roy. $2.50.

TWO fugitives board a ship in San Francisco Harbor. One, Dunstan, has stabbed another sailor to death in a street fight. The other, a Negro named Mark, has stumbled over the body and is afraid he will be accused of the crime. Fear settles over the two bunkmates on the voyage to Panama. Dunstan's fear is logical enough, but Mark becomes convinced that Dunstan suspects him of the crime. He jumps ship in Panama and finds shelter with a woman, but the hysterical fear will not down and finally it drives him to the very crime he has been denying. Baer's curiously incoherent prose is a kind of crude but effective expressionism. It conveys a raw, unkempt story of uncommon strength.

NEWSPAPERWOMAN. By Agnes Underwood. Harper. $3.50.

MRS. UNDERWOOD is city editor of the Los Angeles Evening Herald and Express. She began on the switchboard of the Los Angeles Record in her teens, and worked up to the woman's department and then the city staff. She switched to Hearst in 1935, and covered everything from plane crashes to movie celebrities until she was made city editor two years ago. But most of the stories she recalls here concerned crime: "Tiger Girl" Clara Phillips, and the "Moonlight Murder" of Librarian Ruth Muir; the killer who gave himself away with a wink, and the one who did it

JEAN BAROIS. By Roger Martin du Gard, translated by Stuard Gilbert. Viking. $3.50.

THIS is a long overdue translation of a novel written 35 years ago by the man who won the Nobel Prize for literature in 1937. It is the life story of Barois: A sickly childhood as the son of a free-thinker who returns to the church on his deathbed; a rebellious maturity when Barois rejects the church and embraces science, and old age and death in which he, too, again accepts the succor of religion. The story is written entirely in the present tense, and for many pages in the form of straight dialogue. These aspects of Du Gard's technique help explain the tremendous dramatic impact of his story.

Psychiatric Guidance Is Literally Play for Arlington Youngsters

Dr. Robert Burham, clinic director, watches a small patient arrange the play therapy room's doll family. What she does with the toy mother, father, baby and several older children can tell the doctor a great deal about her home life

A boy model (not under treatment) plays Chinese checkers with Child Therapist Marquerite Stone. If he made up his own rules as he went along, he might be showing his desire to "control" things to ease his sense of littleness

PSYCHIATRIC help? Arlington youngsters can get it while they play.

At the county's small, progressive Mental Health Clinic, specialists watch a kid's reaction to a cap pistol, a set of dolls, or a tough game of Chinese checkers to find out what ails him.

Children "seldom put their problems into words—they talk by what they do," is the way one clinic worker put it.

The technique of "play therapy" for youngsters is widely used today in hospitals, public clinics and by private psychiatrists. It needs only three elements: a problem child, a trained psychiatric social worker to relate the way he plays to his background—and a locker full of assorted toys.

Well-Stocked Fairyland

AT CLINIC offices in the Arlington Health Department, 1800 N. Edison st., a child's vision of toyland overflows from a cupboard, covers a table and lines the walls.

Under the observing eye of the child therapist, Miss Marguerite Stone, a kid can take his pick of:

Checkers, dolls, toy soldiers, building blocks, a lethal assortment of toy pistols, model airplanes, toy trucks and autos, paints, modeling clay, lotto, a dollhouse (complete with furniture), crossword puzzles, toy trains and a miniature telephone.

When a child starts, open-mouthed, for this fairyland, Miss Stone watches him with this premise as a starting point:

Growing up involves frustration—a child has to forgo some of the things he wants to fit the family and social pattern.

Frustration may make him feel little and weak, and he reacts in any one of a number of ways. It's this reaction that Miss Stone, Clinic Director Dr. Robert Burnham and Psychiatric Social Worker Paul Phillips watch for.

They can learn a lot from a set of dolls and doll furniture.

The way a youngster sets up the doll family is a tipoff to his own home life: father buried behind the evening paper, mother in the bedroom with the new baby. And the youngster's alter ego, ignored, on the living room floor.

One 5-year-old grabbed the "baby" in the doll family and delightedly twisted its arm in a pretty solid indication of his jealousy of the new arrival in his own family.

Specialists can learn a lot from the way a boy fires a toy pistol.

He may blaze away out the door at his departing mother, or at Miss Stone. It's his way of striking back at authority.

Some kids are hungry for a definite reaction. Like the one who ordered Miss Stone to "shoot at me so I can shoot back at you!"

To her, it showed the child wanted a "clear-cut expression of antagonism from an adult so he could feel justified in freely expressing his own resentment."

Clinic workers learn things from children's paintings. They interpret these, generally, in this way: Upper left, loneliness. Upper right, confusion, a lack of parental authority. Bottom left, intended to be a copy of the painting above it, this is incomplete and offers no clews. Bottom right, a skiier on the left, a child-on-sled on the right. Miss Stone thinks the elongated combination of arms and ski poles shows the child's need to "reach" for his parents' standards

Another child model, not under treatment, faces Miss Stone across a mammoth block fort. Specialists believe that the child who constructed it was building a "defense" against his own fears. The way a boy "fires" a toy pistol may be his way of striking back at authority

A Wall Around Him

THEY CAN learn from the way a child plays with clay.

Dr. Burnham recalls one boy who made an endless collection of clay walls. To the psychiatrist, it showed the youngster's need for firm protection around him.

Some children specialize in clay pots, which can indicate loneliness. Troubled children seldom make people of clay, Miss Stone says. They model inanimate things, or animals—sometimes unpleasant ones like snakes. They are "withdrawn" from the world of people.

Play with soldiers, planes, tanks and forts is a good indicator of the problem child, too. Like the boy who put together a mammoth block fort, manned with a regiment of soldiers and flanked with planes and guns. Miss Stone put up a tiny fort of her own, facing it, and the youngster said: "Mine's a better fort than yours."

"But I'm not afraid," she told him. "I don't need a big fort to protect me." The child thought it over for a moment. Then he agreed that he was "scared." It was a step forward.

The clinic doesn't stop with the child. Workers know that a parent's attitudes often lie at the root of a child's problem. So while junior is hard at play downstairs, mother or father is having a "teamwork consultation," usually with Phillips, upstairs. In that way, the clinic can work on the problem from both ends.

Founded about 15 months ago, the Mental Health Clinic is financed by matching funds from Arlington, the State of Virginia and the Federal Government. Its fees range from zero, for indigents, to $15 per interview. It depends on the parents' ability to pay.

To date, those who have paid apparently felt it was worth it.

A 4-year-old model, who is not under treatment, looks wide-eyed at the array of toys in the play therapy room. The ones selected by a patient, and what he does with them, can give a therapist insight into his problems

New Role for a Shakespearean Actor

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

C. MELVIN SHARPE, who has had a varied career as an artist, actor, businessman and civic leader, readily admits that the biggest pair of shoes he ever has tried to fill belong to a diminutive, quiet-spoken woman.

C. M. SHARPE

Last March Sharpe, a member of the Board of Education for the past 10 years and its vice president, succeeded Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle as president of the board.

He stepped into a job that Mrs. Doyle had held for 14 years and inherited from her the many problems that come to the head of a segregated school system.

He also assumed board leadership shortly after publication of Dr. George D. Strayer's extensive and critical report on the District schools.

In the three months he has served as president, Sharpe has seen the board split up into factions. Disputes in general have centered around the extent of powers to be given to Schools Superintendent Hobart M. Corning.

Corning Friend Opposed

ON FRIDAY the board will hold its annual organization meeting and election of officers. Dr. James A. Gannon, physician member of the board and close personal friend of Dr. Corning, has indicated he will oppose Sharpe for the office.

Recently when Sharpe appointed a special committee to investigate inter-high athletics, Dr. Gannon refused to serve on the committee, declaring it would encroach on the superintendent's duties. Sharpe withdrew the committee but probably will reappoint it if elected to his own term.

A native of Philadelphia, Sharpe attended public schools and received his diploma from Philadelphia's Central High School. After graduation his father, a Philadelphia businessman, had his talented son tutored in music, voice and art.

Sharpe went on with his studies at the Philadelphia School of Industrial Art, the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts and the Beaux Arts in Paris, training in portrait, genre and landscape painting.

Now while attending meetings and listening to long speeches, Sharpe fills pages of paper with sketches and caricatures.

The school board president's career on the stage was brief and without parental consent. Under an assumed name he played in stock and for two years toured New York and other Eastern cities, for a time playing Shakespearean roles with Richard Mansfield's company. He still enjoys reciting long passages from Shakespeare and delights his friends with his mimicry.

For a year Sharpe was employed by the Philadelphia Inquirer as an artist. Then he became an etcher with a Philadelphia jewelry house and then an engraver with the American Bank and Note Co. He came to Washington in 1904 as an engraver of bank notes and bonds with the Bureau of Engraving, a job he held until the First World War, when he became assistant secretary of the District Liberty Loan Committee.

An ability to get things done led to his appointment in 1923 as executive assistant to the president and public relations director of the Washington Railway and Electric Co. and later the Potomac Electric Power Co.

Now retired, Sharpe devotes all of his time to civic duties that are as varied as his own interests.

Still a Swimmer

FOR a number of years he has directed the Fourth of July fireworks displays. He has served as a member of the Recreation Board and now is vice chairman of the National Capital Housing Authority and chairman of the Committee of One Hundred for a Federal City.

Sharpe is an avid reader in fields of history, science, art and literature and his conversation touches on all these subjects.

As a youth he played football and was an amateur boxer. At 68 he still is an active sportsman, favoring hunting, fishing and swimming.

With his wife, Elsie, and his 90-year-old mother, Mrs. George H. Sharpe, he makes his home at 2930 45th st. nw. He is the father of two sons, Malcolm and Gordon, both engineers, and a daughter, Mrs. Dorothy Edmonston, an elementary teacher in the schools.

Missourian's Been President Before

PLATTSBURG, MO., May 21.—Despite what millions believe, Harry S. Truman is not the first man from Missouri to be President of the United States.

One hundred years ago another Missourian, United States Senator David Rice Atchison, held that post—for one day.

In proof of their contention, Plattsburg residents point to the statue of Atchison erected by the State in 1928, and the plaque testifying to his "tenure" in the Presidency.

Senator Atchison was President Pro Tempore of the Senate in 1849. The term of President Polk expired on March 3, but President-elect Zachary Taylor refused to be sworn in on March 4 because it was Sunday. Senator Atchison held that he, by virtue of his office, was President until March 5, when President Taylor was inaugurated.

Senator Atchison, like President Truman, was also Vice President of the United States. William R. King, Vice President under President Pierce, died on April 18, 1853, and Atchison held that post until December 4, 1854. Proof of that can be found in the Senate Journal for December 7, 1854, allowing Senator Atchison salary for the office.

The Senator liked to remind friends that he made fewer enemies by his acts as Chief Executive than any other President, because he signed no bills, vetoed no bills and spent most of his "term" in bed asleep.

This Morning

That Doby Boy Well on His Way to Greatness

With Shirley Povich

ON AN August night in 1947, Griffith Stadium was being picketed. A motley line of protestants was greeting the game-goers with placards that read:

"Cleveland has a colored ball player—why not Washington?"

POVICH

"Brooklyn signed a Negro player—why don't the Nats?"

They had selected for their demonstration the night when Cleveland's Larry Doby was to make history as the first colored major leaguer ever to play in Griffith Stadium.

Out of their cabs at the stadium entrance came the Cleveland players, Doby among them. They couldn't miss the pickets. Doby saw the signs and recoiled.

To his friend, Second Baseman Joe Gordon, Doby muttered:

"Jeez, Joe, I don't want to be a symbol—I just want to be a big league ball player."

At that time it was still an unbelievable new world in which 22-year-old Larry Doby had found himself. A year before, he hadn't dared to dream that he would ever be in the big leagues. And then Jackie Robinson crashed the color barrier, and there was hope.

Two years later, Larry Doby is not just a ball player in the majors. He has the American League's savants wondering not whether he will make good, but asking each other if he isn't destined to be one of the great ones.

THERE'S ample evidence that he's on the way to greatness. Already his lengthy home run clouts are being bracketed with the longest Babe Ruth ever hit. In his first full season in the majors, he swatted at least one homer in every park and batted .301.

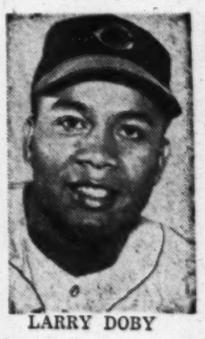
But it's not wholly of Doby's slugging that they talk. Who owns a better throwing arm among the American League outfielders; how many ball players in the league can go to first base faster than this colored boy out of Paterson, N. J.? How can the guy miss?

Maybe it will be pointed out that the pitchers are stopping him this season. The figures show that he is hitting only .254, as of this week. But a year ago in June he was hitting only .247, yet at the finish he was a .300 hitter.

Tris Speaker is one with the conviction that Doby can't miss being a transcendent star in the majors. He's coaching Doby, gratis, in the fine points of hitting good pitching, and playing the outfield. "In another year or two he could be the best ball player in this league," Speaker has said.

Speaker's interest in Doby stems not only from the fact that Speaker is a Cleveland native. "I've never seen a young ball player with such a high potential," says Speaker. "I get a personal pleasure out of working with a kid who can do so many things so well. I used to dream of that kind of a rookie when I was managing the Indians."

WITH the Indian, Doby was welcomed originally as "just one of the guys." Owner Bill Veeck said quickly that was the way it was to be, and if it was at first an order it became quickly acceptable. Ball players do not always like each other. But to a man they are friendly with the quiet spoken, open-faced Loby who still is sometimes give nto pinching himself to make certain he is really in the big leagues.



LARRY DOBY

But in the ball payers' code, you don't have to be particularly friendly with teammates. The guy who can help you win games and get that World Series check, is always welcome. Without Doby, the Indians know they never would have been in the last World Series.

Doby's particular pal on the Indians is Joe Gordon, one

Newhouser Whips Yankees by 9 to 3

New York, June 25 (AP).—Hal Newhouser, although free with his walks, had little trouble in pitching the Detroit Tigers to a 9-3, six-hit triumph over the American League's front-running New York Yankees today.

The classy Tiger left-hander gave up eight walks, three each in the fourth and ninth innings which the Yanks turned into runs.

Hank Bauer singled behind three bases on balls in the second to drive in two runs. Gerry Coleman drove home the Yanks' final run in the ninth when he bounced into a force-out after Newhouser had walked three batters.

The Tigers gave their crack lefty an early working margin, plastering Fred Sanford for four runs in the first inning.

Eddie Lake walked to start the game and raced to third on Vic Wertz's single. Hoot Evers singled Lake across. Sanford then passed Aaron Robinson to load the bases. Johnny Groth grounded out, Wertz scoring on the play, and Don Kolloway followed with a two-run single.

Shea Relieves Sanford

Sanford walked Lake to start the second inning. The stocky infielder moved to second on a ground-out and scored on a single by Vic Wertz. Frank Shea relieved Sanford after Wertz's hit and blanked the Tigers until he was removed for a pinch-hitter in the fourth.

Clarence Marshall took over and yielded a run in the sixth when Paul Campbell singled with the bases loaded. Marshall was clipped for three more runs in the eighth with Evers knocking home two with a double.

Braves Knock Cards Out Of Lead, 10-6

St. Louis, June 25 (AP).—The Boston Braves cut loose with an 18-hit attack tonight to cool off the Redhot St. Louis Cardinals, 10 to 6.

Johnny Sain posted his first victory in over a month but had to have relief from Nelson Potter in the ninth.

The defeat knocked the cards out of first place which they took over only last night. Brooklyn, winner over Pittsburgh, 17-10, moved back on top.

The Cards, held in check by Sain for eight innings, made a game comeback in the last half of the ninth scoring three runs but Nelson Potter came in to halt the rally.

Boston Pours It on St. Louis Again, 13-2; Parnell's 10th

Boston, June 25 (AP).—With his Red Sox teammates blasting 17 hits, Mel Parnell, the southpaw ace, coasted to his tenth win of the season with a 13-2 decision today over the hapless St. Louis Browns who suffered their third consecutive Fenway Park setback.

The Red Sox chased starter Lefty Bill Kennedy, their former farm hand, by pounding him for seven runs in the third inning. That uprising resulted from seven hits, including doubles by Bobby Doerr and Al Zarilla, five singles, a walk, an error and a struck batter.

Zarilla Hits Sixth Homer

Zarilla drove his sixth homer into the right field bull pen with Billy Goodman on base in the sixth inning.

Little Johnny Pesky led the Boston attack with four hits, including a three-bagger on a ball that bounded over Second Baseman Andy Anderson's head and barely cleared the infield. Pesky

Macks Rally After Trailing Chisox, 5-0, Come Through, 7-6

Philadelphia, June 25 (AP).—The Philadelphia Athletics fought an uphill battle today to defeat the Chicago White Sox, 7-6. The win left the As four and a half games behind the front-running New York Yankees who lost to Detroit.

Two hits, three walks, a sacrifice and two errors got the Sox off to a five-run start against Dick Fowler in the first inning. But after that the big Canadian turned on the heat while his teammates pecked away at Howie Judson, chasing him in the sixth inning. It was Fowler's sixth straight victory.

The Athletics put together three hits for their first run in the first inning, scored two more in the third on an error, a walk and single by Sam Chapman, and tied the score at 5-all in the sixth on two hits, a walk and a pair of Chicago boots.

The Sox grabbed the lead in the eighth on two hits and a walk. Then the A's retaliated.

Hank Majeski started the win-

California Wins Rowing At 'Keepsie

By Ted Smits

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., June 25 (AP). Undefeated California, stroked by an Olympic hero, defeated Washington and violent weather today, winning the forty-seventh annual Poughkeepsie Regatta from a record field of 12 crews.

In a driving finish that took advantage of almost the only lull in a stormy afternoon, California wrested the lead from its arch-rivals and came home in a fast 14:42.6 for the 3-mile race. Washington last year's winner, was caught in 14:45.1, barely a length behind.

Six lengths behind the leaders came Cornell, Navy, and Princeton in that order. Wisconsin, a dark horse from the Middle West expected to furnish the challenge to the big Western powers, slipped to seventh place, behind fifth place Princeton and sixth place Pennsylvania.

4 Olympians In Crew

Ian Turner, the California stroke, raised the beat at the end to a terrific 37, which was matched by Washington. Turner, along with three of his companions today—Lloyd Butler, No. 4; Justus Smith, No. 2; and Coxswain Ralph Purchase—rowed in the American shell that won the eight-oared Olympic race in London last summer.

Washington won the junior varsity race, with Navy second and California third. Originally scheduled to precede the varsity, this was delayed to let the big shells take advantage of the current and the easing of the weather.

For a time it looked as if there wouldn't be a Poughkeepsie Regatta today. Rain came down in torrents, lightning flashed, and the Hudson River churned and frothed. Finally the freshman race was run off, Washington winning with Cornell second.

Then a new downpour forced postponement of the varsity race for more than an hour past its scheduled time. But drenched spectators clung to vantage points. Wind upset the dingy of Raymond Winans, 21, of Poughkeepsie, drowning him. Lightning hit the

Prisoners Beaten By Cops, But Not Brutally—Only 4-3

Ossining, N. Y., June 25 (AP).—The Sing Sing prison baseball team was defeated today for the first time this season.

The winners? The Police Athletic League nine of Ossining. The score was 4 to 3, despite a tremendous home run by Piggy Sands for the prison club.

Sands drove the ball over the wall. No one was allowed to go hunt for it. The game was played inside the prison.

Dodgers Rout Pirates, 17-10, 9 Homers Hit

Pittsburgh, June 25 (AP).—The Brooklyn Dodgers smashed the Pittsburgh Pirates 17-10, today with Gil Hodges spearheading the assault by clouting two homers, a triple, double and single.

Hodges drove home four runs and scored four in the slugging duel that was featured by four Brooklyn home runs and five Pittsburgh four-baggers.

Jackie Robinson and Carl Furillo smacked the other Brooklyn homers while Ralph Kiner belted two and Dino Restelli, Wally Westlake and Ed Stevens one each for the Pirates. Kiner's blows were his 17th and 18th of the season.

The nine homers fell one short of deadlocking the major league record for most home runs in a game by both clubs. The last time this feat was accomplished was on August 16, 1947, when the Pirates banged seven and the St. Louis Cardinals three at Forbes Field.

Bob Chesnes started for Pittsburgh and walked home two runs in the first inning. The Pirates bounced back with five in their half, three on Wally Westlake's 12th homer of the season.

Following a scoreless second round, the Dodgers knocked Chesnes and reliever Ray Poat out in the third with a nine-run flare-up. Monty Basgall's error with two out paved the way for six unearned Brooklyn runs.

Robinson's Triple Ties Game In 8th

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

After a damp pause, the Nats came back refreshed and whipped the Cleveland Indians yesterday, 4-2.

Gil Coan did it, delivering a two-run homer in the nineth with two away. Coan didn't get into the game until the eighth when the Nats tied the score shortly before a cloudburst halted activities for 40 minutes.

Coan hit his third homer of the season over the right field fence, six inches from the foul pole, to score Sam Dente ahead of him. His homeric feat presented Ray Scarborough with his seventh pitching victory, although Scarborough worked the ninth inning only.

Young Coan played only two innings, long enough to knock Cleveland out of the first division. In the eighth, he scored the run that tied the game at 2-2 as Eddie Robinson lashed out a triple to drive starter Frank Papish out of the box.

The former White Sox southpaw was relieved by Bob Lemon, who made everything peachy with the crowd of 9695 customers by pitching a home run ball to Coan.

Al Evans, moved into action in a wholesale reshuffling of the Nats' cast in the eighth, started the victorious ninth with a single, but was rubbed out as Mickey Vernon turned Sam Dente's attempted sacrifice into a force out at second.

Sam Mele brought no immediate prospects of victory by striking out for the third time, but Coan took up the slack with his shot over the wall, 328 feet from home plate.

Going into the eighth, the Nats were a beaten ball club and it began to appear that Papish might win his first starting assignment of the campaign.

The left-handed Papish entered the inning with a 2-1 lead over Mickey Harris, who allowed Cleveland all six of its hits, one a home run by Joe Gordon.

The only run that the Nats owned at the late stage of the game was a personal gift of Papish's who committed a balk with Al Kozar on third in the fourth inning.

They came out of the eighth inning, however, with a legitimate run and a new pitcher to bat against. Clyde Wollmer started it with a Texas Leaguer to center and Coan was hustled into run for him.

Up came Eddie Robinson to bat against his former teammates and he quickly showed 'em that he held no soft spot in his heart for them as he cracked out a triple to right center to score Coan and tie the game.

That blow knocked Papish out and brought Lemon in. With one away, he walked Kozar, but got out of the immediate jam when Vernon hauled in Buddy Lewis' grounder and threw Robinson out at the plate.

Lemon still wasn't out of trouble completely, however, as Sherry Robertson, swinging for Ralph Weigel, beat out a hit to short to load the bases. At this juncture Ed Stewart batted for Harris and lined out to Gordon to end the inning just as a torrential rain blanketed the field.

The Indians came up with their first run in the third inning on a single by Jim Hegan, Papish's sacrifice and Ray Boone's single. Gordon made ft 2-0 for them in the fourth when he clubbed his twelfth homer into the left-center stands.

The Nats got one run back in their half of the same inning without employing one of their eight hits. Kozar and Mark Christman walked and when Weigel trickled into a double play Kozar took third.

Papish slipped from the rubber delivering the first pitch to Harris and his hesitant delivery was ruled a balk, allowing Kozar to score.

It wasn't Papish's brilliant hurling that kept the Nats scoreless

Nats' Home Run King of 1899 Dies At Age of 77

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., June 25 (AP).—John (Bucky) Freeman, 77, the major league home run king before Babe Ruth, died today in Mercy Hospital after a brief illness.

Freeman, an outfielder, hit 25 homers and 27 triples with the Washington Senators of the old National League in 1899. The homer record stood off all challenges until Ruth slammed 29 four-baggers in 1919.

Freeman broke into organized baseball in 1891 when the Senators signed him to a contract.

Not-So-Wondrous Newark Dropped From Standings

Newark, N. J., June 25 (AP).—The Newark Star-Ledger announced tonight it is dropping the Newark Bears baseball team from the International League standings on its sports pages "because they obviously do not belong in triple "A" competition."

The newspaper said the Bears "are 18½ games out of first place and have an excellent chance to lose 100 games

The Star Ledger does report the facts and figures pertaining to the Bears' relative standing—but they carry them below the regular listings and under a large heading—"Exhibition Games."

Those Wondrous Nats

Don't ever get Gil Coan mad.

That's a lesson Cleveland Coach Bill McKecknie has learned, albeit a bit tardily. The other night, the Indians vainly protested against the type of bat Eddie Stewart was using. Before the rhubarb ended most of the Indians and Nats were involved, one word led to another and Deacon Bill shouted some nasty words about Coan's playing ability. It must have been embarrassing for Gil before all those 23,000 people.

Gil was het up. But not one to disrespect his elders, young Gil bided his time until the ninth inning of yesterday's game against Cleveland. Then, with the score tied at two all, Sam Dente on first base and two out, Gil blasted a Bob Lemon fast ball over the right-field wall to send us all home happy.

There must have been other things on Gil's mind too, as he circled the bases, one of them being, "Let's see that lucky Joe Gordon get his mitt on that one."

Coan's big blow yesterday comes as no great surprise. Buddy Lewis' recovery from a bad knee and the purchase of Sam Mele from Boston has stiffened the outfield competition and perked up Gil.

The other night against Chicago, he stroked a triple and single. In the first game of the Cleveland series Gil smashed a ninth-inning double which kept a big rally alive and set the stage for Gordon's Great Robbery on Eddie Robinson's game-ending liner. We lost that one, 4-3. Even before Coan broke up yesterday's game we were looking like winners. Mark Christman was great afield, starting those two timely double plays.

And Reliefer Ray Scarborough, who wasn't expected to repeat his 15-win performance of last season, stopped the Indians cold in the ninth. He notched his seventh win with barely a third of the year gone.

Bogley Rates Off Goeltz's Pro Showing

By Jules Loh

THE ACCOMPLISHMENTS of Buddy Goeltz, pro at Columbia Country Club, in the National Professional Championships at Forest Hills speaks well for the chances Gil Bogley, Washington's National Junior champ, would have had against the same competition. Between tournaments Goeltz and Bogley take turns beating each other on the Columbia courts.

THE MAN who eliminated Goeltz at Forest Hills, by the way, was the lackadaisical Frankie Kovacs. And when you think of Kovacs-you remember him as the guy who had a couple of paid attendants follow him around the tournament circuit in Florida to teach him how to shoot a good game of pool.

PANCH GONZALES' number two seeding in the recent Wimbledon Tournament in England was a teriffic jump from his seventeenth place ranking two years previously. The 15 degree rise was due almost entirely to the fact that in the Pacific Southwest Championship in 1947, the dark haired kid from Los Angeles polished off Jaroslav Drobny of Czechoslovakia, Bob Falkenburg, and Frankie Parker on successive days. It was an astounding exhibition by a youngster who was still a virtual unknown outside his own backyard.

After this performance Pancho was set for the big time. He won the Nationals at Forest Hills in '48 by trouncing Drobny, the Czech Davis Cup star, in the finals, 8-10, 11-9, 6-0, 6-3.

ON THE LOCAL SCENE, the Boys' Junior Tournament gets under way at Congressional Country Club tomorrow with Sal Quinones, Georgetown Prep's tennis stalwart, the heavy favorite. And at Davidson, N. C., Tim Coss and Ted Rogers will take a crack at the Southern Tournament.

Riggs, Budge Meet Today

Forest Hills, N. Y., June 25 (AP). Two long-time rivals, Bobby Riggs and Donald Budge, stroked their way today into the final round of the National Professional Tennis Championships. They meet on West Side Tennis Club's center court tomorrow for the title.

Riggs, the bandy-legged retriever from Altadena, Calif., turned back Welby Van Horn of Philadelphia in the semifinals, 6—8, 7—5, 6—3, 6—3.

Budge, the red-haired master from Los Angeles with the powerful backhand, trounced Frank Kovacs of Oakland, Calif., 2—6, 7—5, 6—4, 6—4.

Budge and Kovacs entered the doubles finals by defeating Van Horn and Pierre Pelluzza, 6—1, 6—4, 6—4. John Faunce and Carl Earn led Riggs and Wayne Sabin, 3—6, 9—7, 11—9, before the match was halted by rain. It will be finished tomorrow.

Volk Leads Stock Car Field at Lanham

Lew Volk, of Newark, N. J., who scored a grand slam when stock car racing was introduced at the West Lanham Speedway last week, is expected to lead a larger and faster field into the second week of competition at the Maryland track Wednesday night at 8:30 p. m.

The stock cars with regulation auto bodies powered with racing motors, are running on a weekly Wednesday night schedule at Lanham, supplementing the midget action which continues on Friday night with an all-star lineup.

Novotney, Rush Star For Victors

Chicago, June 25 (AP).—The tail-end Chicago Cubs handed the once high and mighty New York Giants their thirteenth loss in their last 17 games today as Bob Rush pitched a neat 4-1, six-hit triumph.

Frankie Baumholtz' wild throw in the second inning on Buddy Kerr's single allowed Sid Gordon to score with New York's lone run.

Catcher Ralph Novotney drove home three of Chicago's runs with a fly ball and single.

Hank Sauer opened the Chicago scoring in the second inning with his ninth home run of the season.

Hal Jeffcoat then walked and moved to third on Gene Mauch's single. Novotney flied to center and Jeffcoat scored after the catch. Novotney singled with the bases loaded in the fourth to knock in the Cubs' final runs. Novotney's hit chased starter Monte Kennedy.

Giant Manager Leo Durocher was ejected from the game for the second time in five days in the fourth for arguing too strenuously with Umpire Lee Ballanfant over a decision at second.

Cincinnati, June 25 (AP).—Robin Roberts choked off a ninth inning Cincinnati rally today to give the Philadelphia Phillies a 6-5 victory over the Reds before a crowd of 5681.

Roberts took over from Ken Heintzelman with one out after Danny Litwhiler's three-run homer had brought the Reds within one run of deadlocking the game. Del Ennis and Stan Lopata hit successive homers for the Phillies in the eighth.

Cooper Boxes Le Brun Monday

Jimmy Cooper, the little U st. "buzz saw," meets Lea Le Brun tomorrow night in Baltimore. The bout, a 10-rounder, will take place at the Coliseum.

Le Brun has been a tough one for Jimmy. Conqueror of Danny Petro by a knockout in his last appearance at the ball park, Cooper twice has fought Le Brun at Turner's, and dropped both by decisions.

Harrison's 271 Wins Canada Golf Tourney

Toronto, June 25 (U.P.).—E. J. (Dutch) Harrison, the veteran Arkansas traveler from Little Rock, whipped through his fourth, straight subpar round today and won the Canadian Open golf championship with a 72-hole score of 271.

Harrison fired a four-under-par 67 in the finale over the St. George golf course, and he needed to be that good to win.

Zooming up to second place on the strength of a course-record 65 today was big Jim Ferrier, the transplanted Australian now playing out of Chicago. The giant from down under trimmed seven strokes off par with his final round and clipped one stroke from the course record Harrison set in the opening round.

It was Harrison all the way in this 40th renewal of the title tourney. After firing his 66 in the first round, he followed with circuits at 67, 71, and today's 67. His steadiness paid off with the Seagram Golf Cup and a $2000 first prize.

Ferrier's second place total of 275 was worth $1400.

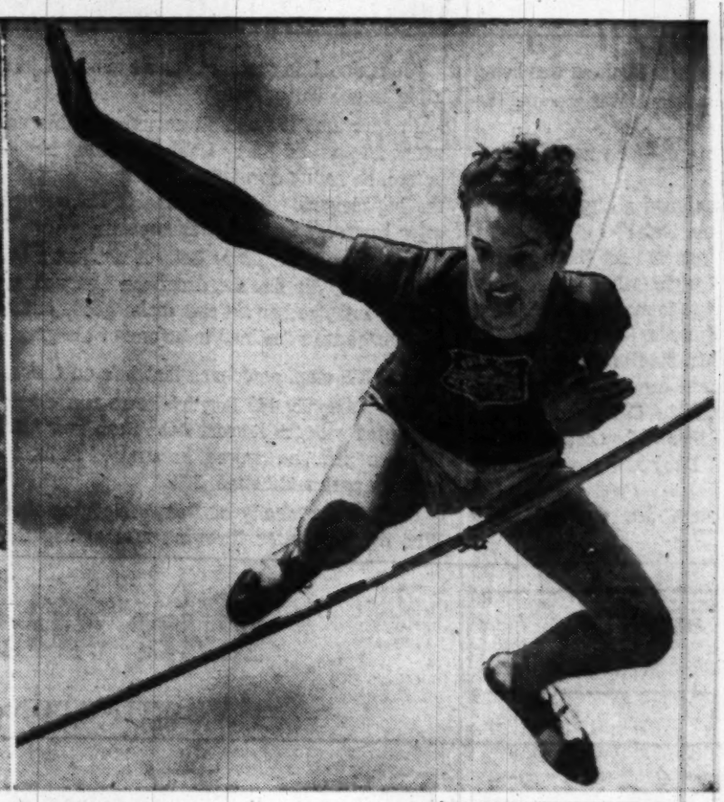
Three players finished in a dead heat for third place at 277, six strokes behind Harrison. They were Jim Turnesa of Briar Cluff, N. Y., who had a 67 today, young Fred Hawkins of Antioch, Ill., who had 69, and Bill Kerr of Montreal.

These three split a pot of $2450 and Kerr, as the leading Canadian, received an extra $250.

Sixth and seventh money was shared by Skip Alexander, Lexington, N. C., and Dick Metz, Virginia Beach, Va., who ended with 278. They'll have $1000 between them. Metz was the favorite of the 6000 gallery today. He's been runner-up twice in the Canadian Open, but today he slipped to a 71 after three rounds of 69 for a 278.

Haefner, runnerup to Cary Middlecoff in the United States Open recently at Chicago, had a 281. He was followed by Fred Haas of New Orleans and Pete Cooper of Ponte Vedra, Fla., with 282.

The rest of the field trailed off. Buck White of Greenwood, Miss., had a 283. Otto Greiner of Woodholme, Md.; Vic Ghezzi of Deal, N. J., and Henry Ransom of St. Andrews, Ill., charged 284s.



Champions in Action In Boys Club Meet

By Jack Larts—The Washington Post

Jerry Gregory of Club No. 10, in pitcure at left, wins the 440-yard dash in yesterday's Police Boys Club track meet at the Eastern High School stadium. Bob Cunningham of Club No. 11 stumbles but finishes second. At the right, Richard Ward of Club No. 5 takes the high jump in the senior unlimited class with a leap of 5 feet 2 inches.

until then, but the Nats futility with men on bases. They loaded the bases in the first inning with one away and couldn't score and had Papish on the ropes again in the third, but still failed to dent him for a run.

Harris, making his second start since joining the Nats from the Red Sox, benefitted from good support to be in the somewhat respectable position he enjoyed before being removed for a pinch-hitter.

Christman chocked off two Indian uprisings by starting double plays. In the sixth, he speared Papish's line smash and doubled Hegan off first when the Tribe had two on and one out.

In the seventh, he hauled in Ken Keltner's hot grounder, tagged Dale Mitchell, who had broken for home, and rifled to Robinson to nail Keltner and complete the odd double play.

IN SHORT—Boudreau loses no time in warming up relief pitchers. He had Satch Paige and Sam Zoldak throwing in the first innng when Papish walked leadoff-man Simmons . . . In the fifth Bob Lemon was called on when Papish walked Dente with one away . . . Eddie Yost took a long workout yesterday and may be back in the line-up within a week. His injured leg is much better . . . Dente's double was his fourth in the last six games and this plus two triples and a few singles during the same span has lifted his average to over .290 . . the Nat shortstop turned in the day's fielding beaut when he gloved Kennedy's grounder over second and routed it to Robinson via Kozar for a double play . . . Sid Hudson will try for his third straight victory in this afternoon's 2:30 contest with Steve Gromek doing the Indians' pitching . . .

Steelers Sign Four Linemen

Pittsburgh, June 25 (AP).—The Pittsburgh Steelers of the National Football League today raised their player roster to 33 with the addition of two tackles, a guard and an end.

Carl Samuelson, 245-pound tackle from Nebraska, signed his second Steeler contract. Alex Lesko, 200-pound end from Homestead, Pa., who played for Notre Dame last year, signed his first. Also signed were Guard Tom Donan and Tackle Bill Luchnick, both from the Bloomsburg State Teachers College team of 1948.

Gregory, Baker Star

Police Boys Club No. 10 Takes Both Sections of Track Meet

Taking 18 firsts, Police Boys Club No. 10 walked away with both sections at the 12 annual Metropolitan Police Boys' Club track and field meet at Eastern High Stadium yesterday.

No. 10 piled up 32 points in the senior division and ran away with the junior division with 120 points to second place No. 11's 51 points.

Volunteer workers from the Board of Directors assisted Kid Edwards and Director Harry Childs in putting over the 29-event meet.

Terry Gregory and Art Baker helped mightily in No. 10's triumph. Gregory was high scorer in the senior division with nine points, and Baker tied with Jack Linden of No. 11 for high total in the junior division with 15 points. Relays did not count in individual scoring.

Virginia Commission Considers 21 Sites For Proposed Small Mouth Bass Hatchery

By Ralph Murdock

CAREFUL EXAMINATION has been made of 21 possible sites for a proposed small mouth bass hatchery in Virginia. It is probable that the commission will make final selection in Richmond, July 24.

Murdock

The small mouth bass section of the hatchery at Front Royal, conceded to be one of the most efficient in the country, produced 54,051 small mouths last year. Even this is an inadequate supply for the many fine small mouth bass waters in the State and the need has long been recognized for a substantial increase.

Small mouth bass are among the most difficult game fish to raise. They are extremely cannibalistic and have to be handled with great care from the time they are hatched until they are released in public waters.

Virginia is making a practice of stocking long-eared sunfish everywhere that the small mouths are released. The sunfish are highly prolific and furnish food for the bass. Large numbers of sunfish come from the Front Royal hatchery.

TWO MEN WERE recently arrested for seining trout from one of the pools at the Montebello rearing station in Nelson County. These men were each fined $25. One is serving a sentence of 30 days in jail and the other, 60 days. The pools of large trout at both Montebello and at Marion have been invaded by night seiners in past years and this practice has been hard to break up. The jailing of the two men should serve as a warning.

JOHN A. CLARK of Cheverly, Md., who has a summer home on the Chesapeake Bay, decided to give his youngsters, Mary Joan, 12, and John Aloysius, 14, a whirl at fishing. A neighbor's boy, Paul Hershberger, 11, heard of the planned trip and expressed a desire to join. All agreed that 6:30 a. m. would be the "off time." Rather than be late, Paul arrived four hours in advance lugging a well filled shopping bag.

At the designated hour, four life preservers were tossed into a rowboat and the four climbed aboard. The outboard hustled them out to the fishing grounds. There were only three fishing rods aboard so Paul produced a hand line from his bag.

After two and a half hours excitement, 16 jumbo hardheads were hauled into the boat but Paul was shut out. Poor fishing luck did not destroy our hero's morale because he had other things to accomplish of importance.

He finished the remainder of the contents of the bag which consisted of three large "Dagwood" sandwiches, two large chunks of cake, and chased it down with two pints of milk. Note — Paul weighs 62 pounds and ended up with his share of fish which he carried home in the same bag.

IT IS REPORTED that the haulseiners have reaped a harvest on the Potomac River by landing nearly 100 tons of hardheads during the last few days. Croakers are retailing at 30 cents a pound in the fish markets and that ain't hay.

Other reports coming out of the Tidewater Fisheries Department, indicate that 17 haulseiners were arrested in Calvert County for hauling with power and hauling without licenses.

Here's proof that bottom fishing, which represents the bulk of saltwater angling, is good in midday. Col. George Isaacs and Robert Soper were guests of Ed Silver on the latter's cabin cruiser, Marie C. Leaving the dock in Herring Bay, they ran out to Holland Point Buoy at 10:30 in the morning and were amply rewarded for their efforts.

Robert Soper, who hails from Florida, said "I have never had such good fishing since the blues invaded the Chesapeake in 1932." We anchored right into the fish and they never stopped biting. We must have caught around 175. We were too played out to count them." The catch included about 30 big hardheads with perch and spot making up the balance.

Large quantities of trout that will average 1¼ pounds have just entered the Chesapeake at Point Lookout and the fishing boats have already brought in catches up to 50. More details about this on Tuesday.

of their brightest stars. It was Gordon who set the example of comradeship with the first Negro player to enter the American League, and that was strange, perhaps, because such was not the reputation of the Indians' second baseman. "Gordon's a griper. He doesn't get friendly with anybody," they used to say of him when he was with the Yankees for a decade.

Yet it was Gordon who, on the day that Doby made his first appearance in the Indians' lineup and struck out as a pinch hitter, patted him on the back friendly-like and said, "We all do that. Watch me."

FROM Gordon, too, Doby can take a rif. There was the day in the dressing room when Doby pointed to his bruise after being hit on the thigh by a pitched ball and said, "Hey, Joe, look at this red spot."

Gordon looked and then mocked-sneered, "Whaddaya-mean, red spot? You're still chocolate-brown all over." Doby could smile at that, from Gordon.

Mrs. Etta Doby's boy, fatherless at eight, was born in Camden, S. C., and grew up in Paterson, N. J. He grew up, in fact, to be the All-State scholastic halfback for Paterson East Side High School, second baseman on its baseball team, forward on its basket ball squad, and the school's best track man in the 440 and broad jump.

He was scarcely reared in luxury, with Mrs. Doby employed as a domestic, but he could get $10 a game for playing semipro tball, and that helped. And then when the Newark Eagles of the Negro National League took an interest in him in 1942, he could help the family exchequer with $200 a month.

DOBY was doing very well as a second baseman in the fastest of the Negro leagues in 1943, and ultimately attracted the attention of that well-known talent scout, the late Franklin D. Roosevelt, who forwarded "greetings." Larry accepted a commission in the Navy as seaman 2/c.

That took him to Great Lakes as a physical education instructor, before he was to get a Pacific theater assignment. He played ball at Great Lakes, but not with the white boys. Navy segregation, you know. They had an all-colored team.

A year later, another ball player moved into the Great Lakes training Station, name of Bob Feller. Doby had already moved on, but there wasn't the vaguest idea at the Great Lakes or anywhere else, in those days, that the great Bobby Feller and the second baseman on the Navy's colored team would ever be clubmates in the major leagues.

At the war's end, Doby rejoined the Newark Eagles in 1946. In 1947, he was their regular second baseman, and making $4,000 for the season. Along about the last of June of '47, he heard, round about, that a big league club was scouting him. He presumed it to be the Brooklyn Dodgers. Eventually he learned it was Cleveland.

Bill Veeck got the tip on Doby from Abe Saperstein, Chicago promoter who had an interest in colored franchises and also operated the famed Harlem Globe-Trotters Basketball team. "This Doby has to be a great ball player," said Saperstein.

VEECK didn't quite act hastily. He had two scouts look Doby over. Finally he dispatched his most-trusted operative, Bill Killefer, the old catcher, to pass an opinion. Killefer reported, "Buy him.'

The price of Mrs. Effie Manley, owner of the Eagles, was $15,000. Veeck was careful to acquire Doby through regular channels, in contrast to Branch Rickey's snatch of Jackie Robinson from the Kansas City Monarchs, for nothing.

The Cleveland representative told Doby he was to join the club in Chicago. "You can either fly or take the train," he said.

"No plane for me on this trip," said Doby. "This is once when I prefer a train. Nothing against planes, you know. I just don't want anything to happen between now and the day I get into a big league uniform."

When Veeck scanned his new purchase, he saw a good-looking chap, 180 pounds, muscular in the legs, shoulders and arms, with a waist that milady would envy, and six feet one in height.

It was a jittery, nervous Doby who reported to the Indians. The circumstances didn't help him. He was being used chiefly as a pinch hitter, was always on the spot in his introduction to big league pitching. In 32 times at bat before the season ended, he struck out 16 times, hit only .156.

He didn't know that Veeck had bought him on a look-see basis; that he could be returned to the Newark Eagles if the Indians didn't like him. For Doby it was a blessed ignorance. The best tribute to the Indians' confidence in him is, perhaps, the fact that they shelled out the $15,000 for a guy who had hit only .156.

THE story of the big league star Doby began, actually, the next spring in Tucson. The Indians had already despaired of him as a second baseman, from the little they had seen. And anyway, they had Joe Gordon. But despite that .156 average in 1947, there was something intriguing in that wonderful cut Doby took.

Maybe the guy could play the outfield? Doby leaped at that chance. "I knew I couldn't stay in the majors as a second baseman anyway," he said. "Couldn't control my throwing arm. It was too strong. I'd never learn to make that soft throw you need a half dozen times a game."

By opening day of 1948, Doby was Cleveland's regular center fielder, the hottest hitter in training camp, and improving rapidly as an outfielder. Speaker went to Tucson to coach him. He quickly sensed Doby's chief outfielding weakness. "Never mind the pitch. Watch the bat," Speaker counseled.

There were other flaws in Doby's play. He didn't know how to run the bases. Was using that high knee-action gallop of a football halfback, and swaying from side to side as if he were going through a broken field. "The baseline is a straight line," Speaker reminded him. "Forget about how you used to run in football."

And he had to forget, too, about those head-first slides he was in the habit of making. "You're a dead duck going into the bag that way. Easy to tag," pointed out Speaker. "There's no substitute for the hook slide. Come on over to the sliding pit."

But by June of 1948, the skeptics were pointing a finger at Doby. He was hitting less than .250. He was still green in the outfield. The Indians were dickering with a Three A club to take him for seasoning. They still liked him as a prospect, but reasoned that idleness on their bench would do him no good. Veeck asked Vice President Hank Greenberg to talk to Doby, tell him of the Indians' plans, and learn his reaction. "We don't want to break his spirit," said Veeck.

GREENBERG and Doby talked. He'd go back to the minors, Doby said, but he'd battle his way back to the Indians. So impressed was Greenberg, he suggested to Veeck one more chance for Doby. Lou Boudreau put him in the lineup that same day. It was in Washington. It was the day that Doby walloped his historic home run into the loud-speaker horns atop the center field fence.

They never got him out of the Cleveland lineup thereafter. His average zoomed over the .300 mark, and his hitting was a hefty factor in their pennant. In the World Series he got their first extra base hit, their first home run, led the Cleveland club in hitting, their only man to hit .300 in the series.

There never was any doubt who'd be Cleveland's center fielder this year. Boudreau could abide Doby's traces of greenness in the outfield, for the benefits of his hitting. Sure, he'd actually been hit on the head trying to field a short fly ball in Philadelphia in 1948, and it was a well-publicized story.

In fact, on the Indians' return trip to Philadelphia, Doby was heckled by the character who occupies a box over first base and calls himself "The Voice of Philadelphia." For Doby's reappearance, "The Voice" outfitted himself in a German helmet of World War I vintage and yelled "Hey! Dopey! Wanna borrow this!"

Coach Bill McKechnie took Doby aside and told him not to be disturbed. "Now's the time to show 'em you can take it," McKechnie counseled.

It hasn't been all fun for Doby. Down in Texarkana, Tex., on the Indians' barnstorming trip this spring, he had a cab door slammed in his face by a white driver, and was forced to walk to the ball park. Fuming, Doby told Manager Boudreau, "I don't wanna play in this damn town." He cooled off, and played.

On the trip north, Doby made history in Houston. He swatted a ball over the center field wall to equal the feat of the late Hack Wilson, who back in 1929 had cleared the same fence. No others had done it.

ON Clevelands first trip to New York, Doby hit a 435 foot home run into the right center bleachers and there was wonderment if Ruth had ever hit one farther in his own park. A week later, his name was bracketed with Ruth's again. In Washington, he hit a Sid Hudson pitch far over the built-up scoreboard, and that one was estimated at 500 feet.

"Fastest wrist-action in baseball," was Pitcher Mickey Haefner's tribute. "Faster wrists than Ted Williams."

Sid Hudson, the victim of both of Doby's tremendous Griffith Stadium homers, goes for Doby as "a heluva hitter and a nice guy." They were chatting before the game the other night. Doby went back to the Cleveland bench and commented, "Sid is an awfully nice fellow to talk to."

It was pointed out to Doby that following his home run swat off Hudson last season, Hudson promptly knocked him down on his next trip to the plate. "I know that," Doby said. "That doesn't bother me and I ain't blaming him. I'd knock myself down if I was pitching at me, and I had just hit a homer the last time up. That's part of the game."

The Larry Doby's now own a home in Paterson. Pretty little cottage. Doby made a hefty down payment on it with his World Series check. "Now if I can just stay around in this league long enough to buy a house like that for my mother, it will be wonderful," he said. The prospects are bright that Mamma Doby will be living in her own home.

Geoff Brown Wins In Four Sets

London, June 25 (AP).—Richard (Pancho) Gonzales, 21-year-old U. S. singles titleholder, was spilled out of the Wimbledon Tennis Championships today in a sensational upset by the two-handed shots of Australia's Geoff Brown.

Prime Minister Attlee and some 17,000 other sweltering fans saw the second-seeded Los Angeles husky bow out in just one hour and 13 minutes on Wimbledon's famed center court, 2-6, 6-3, 6-2, 6-1.

All the other seeded stars gained the men's singles quarter-finals with straight-set triumphs, including top-seeded Ted Schroeder of La Crescenta, Calif., Defending Champion Bob Falkenburg of Beverly Hills, Calif., and for U. S. titleholder Frank Parker of Los Angeles.

Failure to get in his blistering first service and the effects of a lingering cold contributed to the downfall of Gonzales, who made a meteoric rise to the top of the U. S. rankings in 1948.

Of the other singles survivors, Schroeder had the hardest match. He eliminated Vladimir Cernik of Czechoslovakia, 6—3, 8—6, 8—6. But the tournament favorite from California always had something in hand.

Appearing almost indifferent at times, he snapped to attention at the right moment to parry a serve or angle a volley and win the set.

Parker, seeded third, used only 57 minutes in ousting George Worthington of Australia, 6—2, 6—3, 6—1, on an outer court which drew few spectators from the Saturday crowd estimated at 30,000.

Falkenburg, seeded fourth although he is the defending titlist, eliminated Hans Van Swol, 34-year-old Dutch physician, 7—5, 6—0, 6—4, also without incident.

Australia matched the United States by putting three men in the round of eight. In addition to Brown, they were John Bromwich, who stopped Rolando Del Bello of Italy, 6—1, 6—1, 6—0, and Frank Sedgman, who turned back Philippe Washer of Belgium, 6—4, 6—4, 7—5.

Eric Sturgess of South Africa, runner-up to Gonzales in the United States championship last year, eliminated Gianni Cucelli of Italy, 6—2, 6—4, 6—1.

Jaroslav Drobny, Czechoslovakia's Davis Cup ace, defeated Nigel Cockburn of South Africa, 6—2, 6—3, 6—2, to complete the quarter-final bracket.

When they lineup Monday after resting tomorrow, it will be Schroeder against Sedgman, Parker against Sturgess, Falkenburg against Browmwich and Drobny against Brown.

Louise Brough of Beverly Hills, the defending women's champion, moved one notch ahead of the other American women when she dropped Rosemary Walsh of Britain, 6—1, 6—2, to enter the quarter-finals.

Shirley Fry of Akron, Ohio, beat Arville McGuire of Piedmont, Calif., 6—3, 6—4.

Rihbany of Boston defeated Britain's Joy Gannon, 7—5, 7—5, to gain the fourth round, where they joined Mrs. Margaret duPont of Bellevue, Del., the United States champion, who moved up yesterday.

Mrs. Pat Todd of La Jolla, Calif. received a postponement of her third-round match with Mrs. R. M. Dowdeswell of Kenya. Mrs. Todd came down with a stomach ailment early today, but a doctor approved of her competition in doubles.

She and Gussie Moran of Santa Monica, Calif., beat Mrs. Betty Coutts and Mrs. Joey David of Britain, 6—4, 6—4, to reach the quarter-finals.

Thrifty Beaten In Tourney, 3-2

The Dr. Pepper team from Frederick, Md., defeated Thrifty, 3-2, in a Central States Invitational Softball Tournament game yesterday at Alexandria Stadium. The finals of the tournament will be played at 7:15 tonight.

In other games yesterday, Georges, of Baltimore, Md., beat Temple Trailers, Alexandria, Va., 3-2; Democratic Club of Bethlehem, Pa., defeated Kavakos Club, Washington, 3-2; and Kavakos returned to beat Temple Trailer, 4-2.

3 Canadian Horses Win 3 Laurel Races

The rains come last night and played havoc at Laurel raceway, as only three of the eight races were staged before a crowd of some 6500 persons.

Officials were in a dither earlier in the night when a torrential downpour broke shortly after the first race post time, and the races were held up for an hour and 40 minutes before President Dick Hutchinson, jr., announced that three races would be offered.

With trackmen working over the oval for some 40 minutes to get it into shape, it remained for three Canadian-bred horses, used to racing over snow, mud and mire, to win every race.

Dick Berdier, a 23-year-old French-Canadian, proved the hero, as he piloted Mr. McKillop to victory in the first race for a mutuel of $9.40, $5 and $3.80, and came back in the second event to win with Patsy Stars, paying $22.40, $10 and $6.

And to make it an all-Maple Leaf card, driver Al Ingram, of Albion, N. Y., sped Pine Ridge Jim, a canadian-bred and born gray gelding, to victory in the third, for a mutuel of $8.00, $5.20 and $3.40.

Through the first three races the fans wagered a $78,495. The Laurel Raceway, however, will get an additional rain night, as the Maryland Racing Commission ruled that the track must have at least four races before a card is complete.

The daily duoble, personally handled by Driver Berdier, paid $413.20. There were 11 lucky ticket holders.

President Hutchison announced that all persons who bought tickets for the races will be honoed for next week's card.

16-Year-Old Channel Challenger Worried About Bad Impression

Somerset, Mass., June 25 (AP).—Sixteen-year-old Shirley May France, who hopes to swim the English Channel this summer, is going to have a New York rehearsal and she's worried about how she may look after it.

The pretty high school girl said today that on July 4 she's going to swim the 8 miles from the Battery to Coney Island.

"But I hope," she explains, "that people who watch me come ashore won't get the wrong impression. I'm afraid they'll think I look terribly tired after that short swim.

"But if I do, it's only because I don't get my second wind until I've done about 10 miles." She's planning her Channel try for mid-July or August and says: "I know I can swim the Channel."

Brink, Fisher Tennis Champ

Austin, Tex., June 25 (AP).—Jim Brink and Fred Fisher of the University of Washington won the national collegiate tennis doubles championship today, defeating Art Larsen and Sam Match of the University of San Francisco, 4-6, 6-3, 6-3, 6-3.

It was the fifth time that Brink and Fisher had played together. It also was the first time a Washington team ever won the national championship.

The doubles finals wound up the annual tournament with San Francisco winning the team championship with seven points and Collins College, Washington and Tulane all tying for second with four points each.

Handsome Jack Tuero of Tulane bounced back twice this morning to beat Match for the singles championship.

The tall, swarthy man who was supposed to win the title two years ago and failed had the reserve strength when the chips were on the line this time and he came from behind dramatically for a gruelling 2—6, 0—6, 6—4, 9—7, 6—0 victory over the poker-faced sad-eyed veteran from the Pacific Coast.

Leavens, Thackera Upset Welsh, Lynch in Tennis

In a surprising reversal of form, Don Leavens and Jim Thackera came from far behind to defeat Barney Welsh and Hugh Lynch, 7—5 and 6—4, in one semifinal match of the Woodmont Invitational Doubles Tennis Tournament yesterday at Woodmont Country Club.

The other semifinal, listing Dave Johnsen and Robing Hippenstiel against Fred McNair and Bill Gifford, was rained out and will be played at 1 p. m. today. The winner will face the Leavens-Thackera duo at 3 o'clock.

Welsh and Lynch, heavy favorites yesterday, tossed away at least two excellent chances of winning. In the first set they were leading, 5—4, and it was set point before Leavens and Thackera braced. The losers led by a 4-1 count in games in the second set, then collapsed as the winners ran up five straight games.

CYO Finals Set

Finals in two divisions of the Catholic Youth Organization Baseball League playoffs will be staged today at Taft Playground. At 1 p. m. the junior finals pit St. Teresa's and Holy Comforter, and at 3 p. m. it will be St. Gabriel's against St. Ann's in the intermediate finals.

Smith Hurls 1-Hitter

Charley Smith pitched a one-hitter as his Sommers Camera teammates downed Maryland Sports Club, 4-0, in a Prince Georges County League game yesterday.

Ace Admiral Wins

Arcadia, Calif., June 25 (AP).—Ace Admiral won the $25,000 Inglewood Handicap in a blanket finish today before 34,375 fans at Hollywood Park at Santa Anita.

Sen. McCarthy Wins On Mule At Outing

Charles Town, W. Va., June 25.—Senator Joe McCarthy of Wisconsin was the riding hero of the National Press Club's outdoor fiesta staged at the local Turf plant of the Charles Town Jockey Club. Senator McCarthy put up a driving finish aboard a mule named Ginger Rogers and won the Hew-Haw handicap, The mule had a lukewarm backfeaturing a five-race program, ing in the crowd of 500 frolicklicking newsmen and paid $8.60.

Shirley Temple, a larger mule than the winner, appeared headed for victory when she suddenly bolted for the inside rail, stopped and then leisurely walked to the finish line as Betty Grable rallied to be second.

The turf program included three races with regular horses and riders and, in addition to the mule race, an event for plough horses.

The Congress team won the baseball game from the Press nine, 5-1. Congressman W. M. Wheeler of Georgia was on the mound for the solons and held them at bay for three innings before a heavy shower ended hostilities. Umpire Dutch Bergman was unable to get either team back on the field after the downpour ended.

'KEEPSIE—Fr. Pg. 1-C

lofty railroad bridge, exploding in yellow ball.

Magically the rain abated, the skies turned from lowering black to misty gray, and the shells came out on the river. By 6 p. m. (EST), California had won, thereby scoring again over its arch rival from the Northwest.

Earlier this year California defeated Washington at Seattle when the Washington shell caught a crab—missed its stroke—150 feet from the finish. Last year, after Washington had taken all three races in the Poughkeepsie Regatta, California won out in the Olympic trials—all of which happenings made today's big race almost a grudge battle.

Cornell Surprise Third

California had been picked to win by most observers, with Washington second. The big surprise was Cornell, considered no better than eighth. The Cornell shell, backed by a tradtion of 12 victories at Poughkeepsie—the most of any school—forged up to third place in the stretch.

Although out of the contention, Syracuse did its best to make the retirement of its famous coach a pleasant one. Ned Ten Eyck is 70 and this is his last regatta. For 46 years there has been a Ten Eyck at Syracuse, father and son, and a Ten Eyck at Poughkeepsie.

When the varsity race finally started, Coach Ky Ebright's California shell jumped into the lead, followed by Princeton, Washington and Pennsylvania. Soon, however, the Washington Huskies of Coach Al Ulbrickson were a full length in front.

At the mile, Washington led California, with Princeton third, Navy fourth and Penn and Columbia scrapping for fifth. Cornell and Wisconsin were even farther back, while Stanford, Massachusetts Tech, Syracuse and Rutgers trailed in that order. The two mighty Western teams used a steady 31 beat to build up a lead over the pack.

California Makes Bid

At 2 miles, California started to make its bid and drew almost even with Washington. Here Navy was third, and Princeton and Cornell almost tied for fourth, with the surprising Columbia boat next in line, ahead of Wisconsin.

Then two separate battles took shape—Washington and California far in front, and Cornell, Princeton, and Navy leading the rest of the pack. Navy held the edge over the contenders as the field reached the railroad bridge, and Cornell was barely ahead of Princeton.

Steadily California and Washington increased the beat—to 33, and finally to 37. Cornell drove into third place.

The judges had a little difficulty despite the apparent wide margin of California over Washington, because California was in lane eight, between the middle of the river and the east bank, and Washington was in lane one, against the wooded, western bank. The wide separation of the lanes made the decision difficult.

The order of finish for the freshman race:

1, Washington, 9:40.2; 2, Cornell, 9:45.9; 3; Washington, 9:46.8; 4, Princeton, 9:59.2; 5, Pennsylvania, 9:59.3; 6, Massachusetts Tech, 9:55.4; 7, Columbia, 9:58.9; 8, Navy, 10:03.5; Syracuse, 10:14.3.

Despite the foul weather several thousand spectators clung to their places on the mid-Hudson bridge, on the docks of Poughkeepsie, on the crags on either bank—drenched but determined.

They even waited to see the 3-mile Junior Varsity Race, which ended at 7 p. m., EST, obscured in liquid haze. The order of finish:

1, Washington, 16; 2, Navy, 16:12.3; 3, California, 16:14.7; 4, Pennsylvania, 16:24.5; 5, Princeton, 16:29.5; 6, Cornell, 16:39.9; 7, Syracuse, 16:48; 8, M. I. T., 17:09; 9, Columbia, 17:20.8.

Suggs Downs Jameson for Title, 5-4

Oklahoma City, June 25 (AP).—Louise Suggs, Carrolton, Ga., defeated Betty Jameson, San Antonio, Tex., 5-4, to win the Women's Western Open golf championship here today.

hTe victory was the first professional triumph for the little Georgia star. It also gave her third Western title to share honors with Mrs. Babe Didrikson Zaharias and Patty Berg, also three-time winners of the event.

A gallery of 2500 saw Miss Suggs shoot steady golf, sometimes reaching the sensational with long putts.

She closed out the match on the thirty-second hole with a conceded birdie four after Miss Jameson's second shot went into a ditch.

It was Miss Suggs' third title in three attempts in the past four years. She won the championship in 1946 and 1947 but did not compete last year.

She collected $500 for her well-deserved decision over her professional rival from San Antonio.

Louise was one over par in the morning 18 to post a four-up lead. And with that head start her work was easy in the afternoon.

A sensational streak of putting on the first nine in the afternoon protected her advantage. She rapped in a 15-footer to halve the second hole, followed up with a 40-foot putt for an eagle three on the par five 447-yard fourth.

A ten-footer gave her a par and a win on the 407-yard seventh hole and boosted her margin to 7-up. Miss Jameson rallied with birdies on the eighth and ninth to reduce the lead to 5-up at 27 holes.

Great approaches were responsible for both of Betty's birdies. She needed only a three-footer on the eighth and pitched dead to the pin from 50 yards on the ninth.

The Texan ran in another birdie on the twelth but missed the chance to keep the match alive when she three-putted from the edge on the par five 631-yard thirteenth.

On the fourteenth, where the match ended, Miss Suggs banged a spoon to the green in two on the par five 415-yarder.

Coe Wins, 6-5, In Trans-Miss

Colorado Springs, Colo., June 25 (AP).—Charlie Coe, the Walker Cup star from Ardmore, Okla., captured the trans-Mississippi Golf Championship today for the second time with a 6 to 5 victory over Fred Newton of Denver.

The first nine holes of their 36-hole title match decided the issue. Coe hacked out a 6-up lead in the initial stretch. That was plenty to carry him through the day, although he suffered a streak of wildness in the afternoon round.

The skinny Oklahoman ran his advantage to seven holes at the end of the morning 18 and from there on out it was just a question of whether Newton had the rallying capacity to trim the difference down to respectable proportions.

Columbia Favored in Junior Inter-Club Matches July 5

By West McLean
Post Reporter

COLUMBIA rules as the favored team in the interclub junior matches which get under way July 5. Nine teams are entered and play will be held over all nine courses with the host club drawing a bye.

Columbia boasts such top flight young golfers as Jack Furey, District Junior champ; Dick Foster, Washington Post schoolboy champ; and Ed Burnap, schoolboy semifinalist.

Kenwood led by John Eisinger and Jerry Cahill figures to give Columbia the most trouble with Prince Georges and Woodmont rating consideration as dark horse entries.

Each team consists of four players, two under 18 and two who may be over 18 but under 21 years of age.

EAST POTOMAC pro, Al Treder, expects 35 to 50 young golfers to turn out for the first junior golf clinic, sponsored by the District public links and supervised by Eddie Bean, Tuesday.

Golf equipment will be furnished free but those who have clubs are asked to bring them. The opening day's clinic will stress rules and etiquette, grip, swing and other fundamentals.

Boys and girls, from 10 through 17, may register for the series of eight weekly lessons and the tournaments to follow at any District public course.

The clinic is open to golfers from any private or public course who registers at East Potomac, Rock Creek, Fort Dupont, Anacostia or Langston.

ENTRIES for the National Junior Amateur championship must be into the USGA office in New York by July 5, fee is $3. Prince Georges is host to the sectional qualifying, July 19. The big tournament will take place at Congressional July 27 through July 30.

The Maryland State Junior will be held July 8 at the Baltimore Country Club, July 8. Entries must be received by Walter Romans, Baltimore pro, by July 5. Fee is $1.

That young lady caddie for Jim Bogley in the District Junior last week was his wife . . . the Bogley's have a baby boy, too.

The District of Columbia Golf Association will sponsor a field day with lessons by Professional Freddie McLeod for junior golfers Tuesday at Columbia Country Club. There will be prizes in the various age groups for the 18-hole event. The starting time is 9 a. m.

Phalanx Fifth . . .

"Missel" Wins Sussex, Sets Record

Delaware Park, Del., June 25 (AP).—King Ranch's Flying Missel equaled the track record of 2:02 in taking the twelfth running of the $25,000-added Sussex Handicap as Cornelius V. Whitney's odds-on choice, Phalanx, could do no better than fifth in the six-horse field. A crowd of 18,000 saw the King Ranch representative score by two lengths to equal the mark set by Stymie in winning the one-mile-and-a-quarter fixture last year.

Flying Missel, winner of his previous two handicap engagements, was followed across the line by Brookmeade Stable's Chains. Foxcatcher Farm's Rose Beam was third, another length away. Clover-Del Stable's Cer Vantes was fourth, followed by Phalanx and Cherry-Oca Stable's First Nighter.

Flying Missel earned $19,800 for Robert Kleberg, owner and breeder of the colt. He was second choice in the wagering and paid $7.70.

Flying Missel was hard held by Jockey Warren Mehrtens in third position during the early running as Cer Vantes and Chains cut out the pace. At the head of the stretch Flying Missel circled the leaders and drew away with ease.

Phalanx, as usual, trailed for the first mile while his supporters waited for him to unleash his customary stretch drive. He was last entering the stretch and could not gain on his flying rival. Phalanx was topweighted under 126 pounds, conceding 16 pounds to Flying Missel.

Special Racing Boat Being Built for Aga

Algonac, Mich., June 25 (AP).—The Chris-Craft Corp. disclosed today a 19-foot facing runabout is being built here for the Aga Khan, Moslem father-in-law of Movie Actress Rita Hayworth. The high-powered boat has a speed of 44 miles an hour, fastest of the company line.

Bill Bennings . . .

AT CHARLES TOWN

Dear Folks:

The National Press Club boys wanted a sure winner. I tried to give them one. Here's the story. A certain horse has been grazing near a gasoline station over on the backstretch. The gas man accidentally knocked a flashlight battery off the shelf and swept it out. The horse swallowed the battery. Next morning he ran so fast he melted the clocker's watch. An X-ray showed the battery was lodged in his throat. Thus he became the first horse in history to electrify himself in the stretch. The trainer looked up the rules and couldn't find anything against a horse running with an internal battery. I can't tell you the name of the horse. However, just watch the parade to the post and if a horse is snorting sparks, get your bets down. That's he. He's not only ready—he's ever-ready, if you know what I mean. . . . BILL.

Rippey Bows By Neck in Handicap

By John Chandler

New York, June 25 (AP).—Shackleton won the $56,300 Dwyer Stakes by six lengths at Aqueduct today but the Carter Handicap provided the thrills for a steaming crowd of 24,003 cash customers.

Not more than five lengths separated the nine-horse Carter field as King Kranch's Better Self squeezed under the wire to grab the $29,400 number by the length of his perspiring neck.

Just outside the sixteenth pole in the 7-furlong Carter, William Helis' Rippey took a slight lead and seemed to be headed for first money of $20,350.

Better Self Wins Duel

But Jockey Dave Gorman had Better Self rolling and he slammed home to grab the pot. Rippey took second by one-half length over Samuel Greenfield's High Trend—who came from last at the head of the stretch.

Actually less than a length and a half separated the first four older horses at the finish. Better Self, in taking his third victory in five 1949 starts, was clocked in 1:25 1-5 and paid $5.60, $2.90 and $2.50. The $20,350 boosted the 4-year-old colt's total winnings to $291,800.

Much of the Dwyer's usual glamor—the event has been run 32 times previously—was missing because Capot, Ponder and Palestinian of the "big three" among the sophomore crop stayed away.

However, the Dwyer was a fair race considering the poor field of six ordinary nags entered.

Shackleton never had won a stakes race before—in fact he hadn't ever started in one. Up until today he had won only two times in 12 starts—one for four this year.

Last year the son of Rhodes Scholar—Flying Gal earned a mere $3750. This year only $3600 until he set sights on the $38,200 Dwyer pot and brought it home to William Woodward, owner of Belair Stud.

Greentree Stable's One Hitter, favorite at $2.70 to $2, was second in the Dwyer, with Brookmeade Stable's Going Away third by 3½ lengths. Eugene Jacobs' Colonel Mike was fourth. Mrs. John D. Hertz' Count Victor fifth, and King Ranch's Storm Bird, last.

Shackleton, in giving Belair Stud its fifth Dwyer—was timed in 2:07 2/5 and returned $9.30, $4.10 and $3.20 for $2.

Star Reward Beats Mighty Coaltown by Three Lengths

Monday Night

Godoy Boxes Brothers at Ball Park

The Liberty Athletic Club stages its second boxing show of the 1949 outdoor season at Griffith Stadium tomorrow night.

In a scheduled 10-round heavyweight bout, Elkins Brothers, 23 years old, takes on Arturo Godoy, Chilean veteran.

Sonny Boy West, local lightweight, battles Jesse "Hooper" Underwood, of Huntington, W. Va., 10 rounds.

Brothers last month slashed his way to a 10-round draw with Pat Comiskey, New York, a 4-1 favorite.

Godoy lost a 15-round split decision to Joe Louis in a championship bout back in 1940 and was knocked out by Louis in the eighth round of a return meeting shortly afterward.

West will be out to strengthen his claim to a national ranking against Underwood, and will be taking on a busy boy who made 29 fights in 1948.

Four supporting bouts are scheduled over four rounds each: Roland Randall, New York and intercity Golden Gloves middleweight champion, meets Johnny Pratt, another former Golden Glover; Joe Davis vs. Coffee Wilkinson, featherweights; Ray Duncan vs. Charlie Williams, lightweights, and Frank Stetka vs. Henry Harrison, heavyweights.

Legion Junior Series Set Up

Indianapolis, June 25 (AP).—American Legion national headquarters announced the regional and sectional setup preliminary to its junior baseball "World Series" at Omaha August 31-September 4.

The winner must outlast a startling field of more than 16,000 teams in 47 States, the District of Columbia and Hawaii. Pennsylvania is the missing State. Post 93, Trenton, N. J., won the 1948 championship at Indianapolis.

The four finalists at Omaha will come from sectional A, Trenton, N. J., August 20-22; sectional B, Sumter, S. C., August 22-25; sectional C, Rochester, Minn., August 21-23, and sectional D, Yakima, Wash., August 21-23.

Regionals funneling into the sectionals include:

A—Augusta, Me., August 14-17 (Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts); Torrington, Conn., August 13-16 (New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Jersey); Parkersburg, W. V., August 14-17 (West Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia).

B—Kannapolis, N. C., August 15-19 (Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, North Carolina); Orangeburg, S. C., August 15-20 (Alabama, Georgia, Florida, South Carolina); Little Rock, Ark., August 13-16 (Louisiana, Arkansas, Texas, Mississippi).

States, districts and territories will pick their champions in tourneys during the first week of August.

Calumet Ace Loses Out In Stretch

Chicago, June 25 (AP).—Star Reward, an 11-to-1 shot in the wagering, registered a smashing upset today in the $27,800 Equipoise Mile at Arlington Park by defeating Coaltown, beaten for the first time this year after eight consecutive victories.

Coaltown, weighed down with top impose of 132 pounds, snatched the lead for only the briefest moments in the stretch when he sailed past the pace-setting Carrara Marble and With Pleasure.

But in that fleeting moment Star Reward charged up from fourth place on the outside and conquered Coaltown to the acclaim of 24,822 fans. His margin of victory was three lengths.

Winner Pays $24.00

Star Reward, owned by Charles T. Fisher, Detroit automobile body builder, ran the mile in 1:35 flat, three-fifths of a second off the record established by the memorable Equipoise at Arlington in 1932.

Coaltown, with Free America as a running mate, went to the post at odds of 1 to 5, and paid $2.20 to place. Star Reward returned $24.00 and $4.20. There was no show betting.

Coaltown, the Calumet Farm's pride and joy, ridden by Steve Brooks, appeared a certain winner as the band of eight handicap stars straightened out for the stretch run, but Star Reward, laying off the sizzling early pace set by With Pleasure and Carrara Marble, came roaring down the outside, caught Coaltown at the eighth pole, and won going away.

Carrara Marble Third

In third place, two lengths in back of the Calumet star, came Helen S. Reineman's Carrara Marble, which recently set a new track record for 6 furlongs.

The triumph, Star Reward's second in four races this year, was worth $18,800 to the Dixiana Stable owned by Fisher. There was only $112,930 bet on the race, as compared with $219,479 when Calumet's Fervent won the race last year. Of this amount, $72,615 was wagered on Coaltown to win and place.

Reno Rose Tops Show At Arlington

Greenhill Farm's Reno Rose, ridden by Melvin Bearns, annexed the hunter tri-color at yesterday's Arlington Lions Club Horse Show at Washington-Lee High School stadium.

Mrs. James C. Hamilton's Tohlton, ridden by daughter Pickens, finished in the reserve position.

Reno Rose accounted for three wins and a second in the four hunter events for a good score of 14 points while Tohlton took two seconds and two fourths for eight points, neither horse being shutout in any class with championship value.

Mrs. Warner Pumphrey's Amity Peavine added her second consecutive championship in the five-gaited division with blues in the model and fine harness classes, her only two appearances.

Ray Webb's Mr. Bee performed well in the high-steppers group to garner the reserve award with seconds in the five-gaited saddle event and the fine harness, placing third in the model class.

The jumper ribbon was awarded to A. S. Daly's Tiny with ten points. Blanche Johnson's Valbo had seven points for the place.

A mishap marred the latter part of the show as Laura Lee Shreve, on her Chico, took a bad spill as her pony stumbled during her round in the pairs of hunters class. The 11-year-old was removed to Arlington Hospital with a lacerated scalp and undetermined injuries.

A Machiavellian Plot

Robinson May Be So Hungry He'll Fight

By Red Smith

NEW YORK, JUNE 25 (NYHT).—Details of a Machiavellian plot of cunning and calculated cruelty have reached this outpost through confidential channels. As a philanthropic service, the intelligence is passed along to the intended victim, although it must be admitted that it is not clear how much good the information will do him.

It seems that Kid Gavilan, the Hawk of Havana who is supposed to box Sugar Robinson for the world's welterweight championship in Philadelphia's Municipal Stadium on July 11, has taken training quarters in the Lash Hotel of Parksville, N. Y. This is a rural garden of blintzes on the shirt tail of the Catskills, maybe 125 miles from Columbus Circle as the smetana splashes.

Red Smith

Now, as everyone knows, Gavilan is a natural welterweight who experiences no difficulties making the division limit of 147 pounds, whereas weight has long been a bugaboo to Robinson, who hasn't been light enough to defend his title since he met Bernard Docusen a year ago this week. In fact, during his whole reign as champion, Robinson consented to train down to 147 only twice before the Docusen match.

Recently Kid Gavilan weighed in with a beef about training in the current hot spell, bringing a sputter of remonstrance from his proprietor, Senor Angel Lopez.

"AND NOW eet's the weather," Senor Lopez said. "Carramba from my leetle restaurant, the Havana-Madrid, I bring you my most beautiful beefsteaks bigarade, which eet costs a customer in my restaurant the left one of his eyes to eat. What you theenk Robinson has today to eat? Tea and toast, and maybe you theenk he likes the weather, eh?"

It was then the Machiavellian plot sprang full blown from the brain of Irving Rudd, chairman of literature in the Gavilan camp and a student of psychological warfare.

"Aha," though Mr. Rudd, "here is the Kid feeding as he pleases, and down near Greenwood Lake Robinson is working at that camp he calls Cabin in the Sky. He is sweating in the ring and galloping over the mountains and working up an appetite and dreaming of friend chicken. How he must be suffering, poor lad."

Chuckling like a ghoul, Mr. Rudd ran for his typewriter and began a letter: "Dr. Mr. Robinson—Kid Gavilan's menu for today was as follows . . .

EACH DAY from now until the fight, it is Mr. Rudd's intention to indite a similar missive to the champion. On a day when the ravenous Robinson is allowed one small chop and a smitch of spinach,he will read that the Kid toyed with a shashlik, dipped into a bucket of borscht with or without sour cream, loaded up on a piroshki of veal kidneys and topped it off with gazpacho habanero.

"Meal after meal, day after day, menu after menu," Mr. Rudd confides, "the torture will be increased. Blini and latkes and pirogen and kashe-varnishkes, Gavilan will gorge on them and Robinson shall hear of it.

"For breakfast on Sundays, naturally, bagel and lox with cream cheese already. Does our Kid weary of these blessings and yearn for something with a more fiery Latin accent? From his angel come chicarrones and olla podrida and arroz con pollo.

"It will be a war of calories, an ordeal-by-the-billof-fare for Robinson. Our Kid will thrive. He will grow great in chutzpah, in aggressiveness. He is a good boy, anyway, with no knadel chin, and I mean to teach him an assortment of klulas, or curses, which he can call down on the head of Robinson at will."

PARKSVILLE, Mr. Rudd reports, has been a quiet place. But as Gavilan speeds up his exercises and draws galleries from both the Lash Hotel's regular clientele and the Latin Quarter of Manhattan, cries of "Arriba" will mingle in the Catskill air with shouts of "Belt him in the kishkas, yet."

It may be that Mr. Rudd expects too much of his somewhat satanic campaign. All the blintzes this side of Moscow probably cannot endow Galivan with a punch to match that of an undernourished Robinson. Allowing for the improvement the Kid has shown in his recent performances, it still is difficult to forget his nontitle match with Sugar Loaf last September.

On that occasion one had the distinct impression that Robinson was boxing very much within himself, making no effort to ruin the light-punching Gavilan as a possible opponent for a championship bout.

However, you never know. There have been occasions when onlookers felt Robinson was past his peak as a welterweight, and the ordeal of making 147 pounds might conceivably take enough out of him to give Gavilan a chance. A Gavilan victory would be a joint triumph for vegetables smetana and cangrejos de morro rellenos.

Snead Enters Tourney Here

Sammy Snead last night entered the National Capital Open Golf Tournament sponsored by the Washington Star July 1-4 at the Prince Georges Country Club. A telegram from the present Masters and PGA champ assured the tournament committee that Snead would be present for the tourney. He also will participate in the clinic on June 30.

Snead is at present second in the list of leading money winners for 1949, just $400 behind National Open Champion Cary Middlecoff, and only $30 ahead of Lloyd Mangrum, both of whom will also appear in the Capital Open Tournament.

Rocca, Kampfer On Mat Card

Argentine Rocca meets Hans Kampfer in the feature attraction at Turner's Arena Wednesday night.

The Argentine is undefeated in six Washington appearances.

Numbers Men Ordered Out Of Brentwood

Brentwood's mayor and two councilmen popped into a "known" betting establishment during the lunch hour yesterday and warned four alleged numbers traffickers to "get out of town."

Mayor James L. Russell said: "We've had a clean town until recently and now they're drifting in from Mount Rainier as a result of the crackdown on racketeers there. 'We're going to clean up here like our neighboring town. If they don't get out voluntarily we'll search every house to ferret them out, if necessary."

Mayor Russell is a structural engineer for the Federal Works Agency. He said he and Councilmen Elbert Brown and William N. Mahassey "just walked right into" an office rented in a brewery warehouse about 1 p. m.

"There were four men taking bets by phone and they admitted they were doing just that—said they were squeezed out of Mount Rainier and had to find some place to set up shop."

The mayor of the community of 4600 explained the action had nothing to do with the impending election, and pointed out he himself is unopposed for office. Brown has no opposition and Mahassey has another year before his term is up.

Sen. McClellan Scores 'Threats' In Patronage Use

By the United Press

Senator John McClellan (D., Ark.) said last night it would be "contemptible and despicable" for anyone—including President Truman—to try to influence legislation through patronage.

McClellan, appearing on an American Broadcasting Co. program, was asked by a reporter what he thought of President Truman's recent implied threat to give or withhold patronage to Democrats depending on how they vote on major Administration bills in Congress.

The Senator replied:

"I think it is contemptible and despicable to put anything on that basis."

Greek Federation Opens Convention Here on Monday

The first of 1000 delegates and visitors expected here for the second national convention of the Pan-Laconian Federation registered yesterday at the convention headquarers at the Statler Hotel.

Convention preliminaries, including religious services, a tour of Washington and nearby Virginia and a reception, will take place today, with business sessions and a banquet and dance Monday.

The organization, according to Andrew D. Vozeolas, attorney and general convention chairman, is made up of more than 100,000 Americans of Greek extraction who can trace their origin to the Province of Laconia in Greece.

The convention will continue through Wednesday, Vozeolas said. Among matters to come up he said, are proposals for aid to Laconia to speed rehabilitation and counter communism.

Senate Group Approves Bill to Hold Down Cotton

By The Associated Press

The Senate Agriculture Committee yesterday approved legislation providing new Federal controls over the planting and marketing of cotton, frankly designed to hold down production in the face of an increasing surplus.

Chairman Elmer Thomas (D., Okla.) said the new controls are needed because there already is a carryover of about 10-million bales.

He explained that the existing law would require an allotment of about 27,500,000 acres for next year because it would be based upon large planting in cotton areas during the past ten years.

"That could mean a crop next year of 20-million bales," he said.

The new control program provides for a national base of 22,500,000 acres computed upon recent production.

Anti-Red Unit Refused Princeton Books

New York, June 25 (U.P.).—Harold Dodds, president of Princeton University, today refused a House Un-American Activities Committee request for a list of books used in the university's social science courses.

Dodds announced the rejection just before sailing for England. He said the request was "an intrusion by Government into an area of education that ought to remain independent and not political."

Overseas Steel Scrap Sales Rules Eased

Restrictions on sales of iron and steel scrap owned overseas by the United States have been lifted. Sales had been limited to buyers who would agree to ship it to the United States.

This no longer is necessary, says Secretary of Commerce Sawyer, because "domestic scrap supplies are more plentiful and iron and steel production is approaching balance with domestic demand."

There still may be restrictions on sales that might move scrap behind the Iron Curtain.

FOR BEST SERVICE PLACE YOUR ADS EARLY

The steadily growing volume of classified ads in The Post, combined with the practice of many advertisers who phone late in the day, is making it difficult to devote the time and assistance to these late callers which is needed to prepare the most effective possible copy.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, JUNE 26, 1949

CONGRATULATIONS! June graduate Donna Robinson gets an affectionate squeeze from her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Carl H. Robinson of Chevy Chase, Md., along with her diploma. Donna was graduated Tuesday from Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School, will go to Greenbriar Junior College in the fall

THE FUTURE MEANS MARRIAGE to June graduate Jean Thomas. Here she is being congratulated by her fiance, Charles Moore, on her graduation from high school. Mr. Moore is a tabulating technician for George Washington University, working at the Pentagon. The couple met at a church conference, will be married in September

LAZING THROUGH THE SUMMER is what high school graduate Nancy Carrol Penrose has in mind. But September will find her enrolled at the University of Maryland, where she plans to study courses to equip her to teach in a nursery school. She'll have a nice tan to take to school, to judge from the start she has already made

GETTING READY FOR COLLEGE, Miss Patricia Anne Moore and Miss Sabra Rowell discover that Patty's favorite tree-climbing costume is just what the well-dressed young ladies at Smith and Mount Holyoke are wearing. Patty, in the tree, has a scholarship to Smith. Sabra, who is peeking at Patty's Smith book here, has a scholarship to Mount Holyoke, which her mother and great-grandmother also attended

No Matter How You Spell It

At FBI, One Can See Many Files and Phials—Both Colorful, Deadly

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

THINGS WE'VE LIKED LATELY: The FBI filing cabinets crammed with poison-filled phials—all in pill form, most brightly colored, turquoise, cerise, canary yellow . . . Mrs. Herbert Elliston's fake chignon of jade green knitting wool—pinned with huge gilt hairpins to the nape of her short cropped hair . . . The Frederick Stirling's three-tiered terrace high above the Potomac—its gigantic box bushes planted by the first Secretary of the Navy—with gravelled paths wandering between century-old chestnut and coffee trees . . . The season's unsolved mystery—a "falsie" found on the floor at the last Waltz party at the Sulgrave Club. With understandable reticence, the orchestra leader refused to announce its finding—now it awaits claimant in the custody of a spritely State Department official.

Diplomatic Phrasemaker

THE Ambassador of Thailand, Prince Wan Waithayakon, who's an uncle of the present King Phumiphon Adundet, and the smoothest diplomat in town. He was trained for his job by Siam's powerful, turn-of-the-century Foreign Minister Prince Devawongse, who maintained his country's prestige at top level.

Mrs. Thayer

The Ambassador's hobby, which has become his second career, is philology. He plays with words as skillfully as a fencer, coins phrases so tellingly they often hit the front pages back in Bangkok. The Ambassador uses this facility to good purpose in personal translations of treaties and many of these philological brain waves have been integrated into the constantly expanding Thai language. Recently Prince Waithayakon personally negotiated the important French-Thai treaties.

Judith Coplon has uttered a few nifty words lately and to make life easy for the Sunday reader we'll present a short glossary: 1. Dichotomy. Well, there are two rather good meanings for this honey: Division or distribution into two subdivisions or parts; hence, cutting in two or division. Perhaps a better one is: Division of a class into two subjects—classes opposed to each other by contradiction. Walpurgian night: Walpurgis—a female saint of the 8th Century, English by birth and credited with converting the Anglo-Saxons to Christianity. Walpurgis' birthday is celebrated the evening before May Day, and the Germans believe it was made occasion for a Witches' Sabbath. The unpleasant females meeting, according to the tradition, on Brocken, a peak in the Harz Mountains. How did this department know all this, the casual reader may well inquire? The answer is: we, too, were educated at Barnard College and though emerging with definitely lower scholastic standing, presumably, attended some of the same classes as Miss Coplon.

THE newest behind-the-Iron-Curtain former Prime Minister to arrive in town, Bogidar Pouritch, was first Minister of Yugoslavia from 1943-1944. Mr. Pouritch is here en route to an outsize Serbian rally in Chicago next week. An old Washington hand, he was Charge d'Affaires of the Yugoslav Legation back in 1928.

HIGH THOUGHTS: Rarified air makes for high thinking, presumably. If so, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court William O. Douglas will come back from his vacation equipped to deal out the most intricate justice. Accompanied by his son, the justice will fly to the Middle East for a spot of mountain climbing. One of his feats-to-be will be to scale Mount Demavend, an 18,600-feet peak in Iran. Mr. Douglas will do a spot of research as he hops from crag to crag and will bring back such Alpine plants as he can reach. He might discover all sorts of new varieties, for in this same neighborhood Dumbarton ave.'s Anthropologist Henry Field stepped on a horned viper, the self-same serpent which Cleopatra used so effectively and which had remained unseen to science for a couple of thousand years. Unjustly, the horned snake was renamed after Field, not Cleopatra!

DIPLOMAS— Passports to Anywhere

By Sonia Stein

SOME TAKE the high road, some take the low road and some take the byroad to meet their destinies. For young girls newly graduated from high school, the paths of marriage, college or immediate employment have almost equal allure.

The pretty young graduates of Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School, who look as alike in their white caps and gowns as roses in a garden, have chosen different trellises to climb.

Sally Gardner is off to hunt castles in Spain. She left by plane yesterday for Madrid, where she'll visit Betsey Culbertson, daughter of the United States Charge d'Affaires in the Spanish capital.

She and Betsey will travel in the southern European countries and Switzerland before it's time to come back here for college in the fall. Sally, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Gardner of Bethesda, isn't sure where she'll go to school next year but it'll probably be Cornell, where one brother will be a senior next year and from which another brother has aready been graduated.

Celeste Panzer won't be embarking on strange, foreign adventure but she has a spot many graduates would envy. After working there afternoons during her senior year to get credits toward graduation, Celeste now has a full-time job at the Lawyers Title Co. of Montgomery County, Inc., in Bethesda.

Celeste has no desire to be a lawyer but she likes this clerical side of the law and enjoys learning about it. Tall, personable Celeste, the daughter of Mrs. Mary D. Panzer of Bethesda, has given up the dramatic lessons she has been taking for eight years, and is applying herself to this job. Then, after a couple of years, if she still wants to study dramatics . . .

Patricia Anne Moore and Sabra Rowell will go almost twin ways next year. Both have been chosen as among the most desirable college material in Washington by two of the country's most particular schools. Patty, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Moore of Bethesda, has been given a scholarship to Smith College by the local Smith Alumnae Club. Sabra, whose parents are Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Rowell, also of Bethesda, has been selected

A GOOD JOB is what most graduates want, and what Miss Celeste Panzer already has. Celeste earned part of her credits at Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School by working afternoons for the Lawyers Title Co. of Montgomery County, Inc.; now has a fulltime job there. Here she discusses an assignment with firm member F. Archie Meatyard, jr., and learns about deeds, title insurance and other details of law

CASTLES IN SPAIN, the proverbial dream of any young lady, are in Sally Gardner's future. She flew yesterday to Madrid, to visit Miss Betsey Culbertson, whose father, Paul Culbertson, is United States Charge d'Affaires there. As she packs her high school prom dress for a summer night in Spain, Sally wonders if her high school Latin will help her with the Spanish senors, since she doesn't speak any Spanish. In the fall she'll travel back with Betsey, so they can both go to college. Sally expects to go to Cornell, where both of her brothers preceded her Children will have a field day at the Potomac Hunt Horse Show at the Kennels near Potomac, Md., next Sunday for Mrs. F. Moran McConihe and members of her committee have scoured the countryside for side attractions.

Fun For Children at Horse Show

There will be a miniature train, complete with engine and coaches; pony rides, a grabbag fishing pond and games, with Mrs. William E. Carroll and Mrs. Littleton Gould, jr., in charge. A fortune teller and a silhouette artist will operate throughout the day for the amusement of older groups, and wheels of fortune and dart games are expected to draw crowds at the booths which Mrs. Samuel E. Bogley and Mrs. A. S. Gardiner, jr., are taking on.

Already the Kennels has taken on a festive air. Green and white awnings shelter the display booths where riding equipment, sports wear, gifts and gadgets of every description will be on sale. Red, white and blue bunting has been used to decorate the grandstand by Mrs. George P. Plummer and members of her committee. Mrs. Godfrey Kauffman, Mrs. Ralph P. Counselman and Mrs. Barrington Wilson.

Mrs. Benjamin Biays, chairman of the hospitality committee, assisted by Mrs. Frank Christmas, Mrs. W. Halbert Poole, Mrs. Richard H. Hawkins, jr., and others will look after the comfort of spectators. The Potomac Band is serving refreshments all day under a cool marquee, and Bella Hagner will be in charge of the "check your baby" department where the tiny tots will be well cared for while the major events are on.

This Year's Girl Grads Are Sweet—AND Neat

By Peggy Preston

THE "sweet girl graduate" of 1949 is no old-fashioned bobby-soxer when it comes to fashion and good grooming. She likes the "neat" look, and prefers individuality in dress rather than a follow the crowd mode.

This is the consensus among a group of 17-year-olds (pictured on Page 1) who were graduated this week from Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School. As they headed eagerly into a new phase of living they carried with them positive opinions on how they wanted to look and dress.

Take, for instance, Celeste Panzer, the career gal of the group, who took a full-time secretarial job the day after graduation. Part-time work with the same law firm during the past year had helped her decide how she wanted to dress in an office.

"I'm the tailored type," says this tall (5 feet, 8 inches), slender young miss. "And I believe in keeping my working clothes as simple and uncluttered as possible."

For office wear she scorns the sweater and skirt idea, and ankle socks make her shudder. It's suits, dresses or a good-looking blouse and skirt outfit for Celeste. She is not above wearing earrings at the office, but bracelets and gaudy costume jewelry are definitely out. "Too fussy," according to Celeste.

Proud of her height, she wears high heels frequently, "flats" on other occasions. She does not care for medium heels, and feels the same way about her hats. "Mine are either big, or little—in between sizes are not my dish," she explains.

Make-up plays a small role in her life. Lipstick is a must, but a cream make-up base is reserved for special occasions. Soap and water are her only cleansing agents, but about once a week she gives her face and neck a going over with a good lubricating cream.

Celeste keeps her thick light brown hair cut fairly short, washes it once a week, and gives herself a home permanent whenever she thinks she needs one.

BLONDE, blue-eyed Nancy Penrose faces quite a different summer from Celeste, and her tastes in fashion are governed accordingly. Bathing suits, play clothes, date dresses and a couple of evening dresses are the important items in Nancy's wardrobe.

This autumn Nancy will become a coed at the University of Maryland, but until then she is just going to "play in the sun." The day after graduation she left for Ocean City, but unlike most early season vacationists, she took a beautiful suntan with her. She has been sun bathing in her backyard for a month, and swimming daily at the country club ever since the pool opened.

"It's important to get a good basic tan before you go to the beach," says golden-hued Nancy. "In that way you can take large doses of the sun and not have to worry about peeling or burning."

Nancy owns several pretty bathing suits, among them two, two-piece outfits, one royal blue, the other dusty pink. Her play costumes include lots of shorts, cotton and cotton corduroy, which she wears with bright cotton sports shirts. She goes barefoot whenever possible, and just for fun likes to paint her toenails a bright red, although she seldom uses it on her fingernails.

Although her hair is now shoulder-length, Nancy plans to cut it as soon as she gets back from Ocean City. "It took a long time to convince us," she says. "But most of my crowd has decided that short hair is all right."

PRETTY, dark-eyed Sally Gardner left yesterday to spend the summer at the home of a friend in Spain. Sally has a clothes problem, but it doesn't amount to much, because her entire summer wardrobe, plus the luggage it is packed in, weighs exactly 66 pounds—the poundage allowed for overseas plane travel.

Sally is lucky because she has a mother who can sew. Many of the costumes she packed into her three pieces of luggage were her mother's handiwork, others were purchased at stores. Included are a bathing suit and a couple of "convertible" play outfits; several printed cottons, play colored linens and chambrays; a black sheer with white pique collar and three evening dresses. She took a suit and coat for travel, a collection of lightweight shoes, hats and accessories.

ANOTHER young miss with definite ideas of her own on this matter of fashion is Jean Thomas, who will be married this fall. Her bridal costume will consist of a good-looking tailored suit and hat.

"I dislike formal weddings," says Jean. "And I've never wanted to be married in satin and a veil." Her hope chest is filling up with silver, linen and practical pieces of household equipment, but she does not intend to spend much money or time on a trousseau.

Jean's most treasured articles of dress to date are her sweaters which carry a varsity letter in five sports, including hockey, basketball and softball.

Diplomas Are Passports

for a scholarship by Mount Holyoke College.

Today's scholarships are not given to studious "grinds." Both Patty and Sabra are active in extra curricular activities besides ranking high scholastically. Both are active in Girl Scouting, Tri-Hi-Y work and literary work.

Sabra is editor-in-chief of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase year book and is coeditor of the school literary magazine. This summer she'll be a counselor at a Girl Scout camp in Kingston, R. I.

Neither Patty nor Sabra was dismayed by a recent article in a national magazine which seemed to belittle the virtues of the all-girls school. Said Patty, whose Smith College was chosen as an example, "The article just made me decide I was right in my choice." Said Sabra, whose mother and whose great-grandmother on her father's side graduated from Mount Holyoke, "I'm going to prove there's a side to the picture the magazine left out."

Donna Robinson is headed for Greenbrier Junior College in West Virginia. She chose the school for its small classes, its wonderful location, and the courses it offers. Her primary interest is art, and if she maintains her strong feel for it—as her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Carl H. Robinson, suspect she will—she'll probably go on to art school.

She'll spend the summer swimming and sunning, as will Nancy Carol Penrose, another long-legged blond, who will be registering at the University of Maryland in the fall. Nancy gets some of her suntan playing with her baby sister in the backyard sandpile at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William A. Penrose of Bethesda. Little Linda is such a charmer that Nancy has decided to be a nursery school teacher.

Already engaged, and planning to be married in September, is Jean Thomas. Serious, dark-eyed Jean met Charles Moore in the time honored way—through a church group. They met early one morning with a group who were going to New Jersey in connection with a young people's conference there. Mr. Moore is a tabulating technician who works at the Pentagon Building for George Washington University.

A mature young lady at 17, Jean plans to work this summer and probably after she is married, too. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank T. Thomas of Bethesda, Jean will be married in a simple ceremony at Arlington Unitarian Church.

Hard to Say 'Good-By' to Andrewses

By Marie McNair

TWO PEOPLE whose au revoirs will be really hard to take are Harry Andrews, South African Ambassador, and his wife Ruth. Friendly, warm and charming, the Andrews will be leaving in August for Paris. It will be another "first" for Mr. Andrews, who has been named his country's first Ambassador to France, the top man heretofore having only ministerial rank.

Harry Andrews came to Washington during the war to head the South African Supply Mission. He had been in London and Switzerland, where he was permanent delegate to the League of Nations and accredited Representative to Geneva—a diplomatic post corresponding to that of Minister.

Four years ago he became South African Minister to the U. S. A., was appointed the first Ambassador in February, 1949.

Mr. Andrews began his colorful career at a tender age. He was 17 years old when he took his first job in the post office at Pretoria. When war broke out—World War I, that is—he joined the South African Signalers Corps and at the end of hostilities rejoined the postal services.

He studied law at the Transvaal University College and he was snapped up upon graduation by Minister of Labor Boydell, who took him on as his private secretary. Promotions then came rapidly. He was named professional assistant in the Department of Justice; went to London as Political Secretary, Department of External Affairs. In 1935 he went to Geneva, in 1942 was appointed head of the Supply Mission here, and in 1944 became Undersecretary of the Department of External Affairs.

Slim and fashion-wise, Mrs. Andrews has a real knack for making and keeping friends. And she really means it when she says she's going to miss them—terribly. Good looking, a perfect hostess, Ruth Andrews will be at home in any Capital. And—the apple of the Andrewses' eyes is their daughter Lydia, 16 or is it 17?, who's a good combination of both.

Monday evening the Ambassador and Mrs. Andrews will dine informally with Col. and Mrs. Robert Guggenheim at Firenze House with a chance for a swim in the blue lined pool beforehand.

On July 6 the Andrewses will go up to Cape Cod for a few weeks holiday at Wianno. They'll be back around August 1 to pack.

CORRESPONDENTS' CORNER:

Loue, France: A card from Mrs. Robert H. Dunlap, summering in her centuries-old chateau after a sort of hectic trip across by plane, and a delay of 13 hours in Newfoundland for a broken wing. A week in Paris, where she caught up with lots of Washington friends, then Katherine Dunlap headed for Coulennes, and her pink stone villa. Mrs. Eleanor de Bekessy has been her guest, also Captain Smith-Hutton, Naval Attache of the American Embassy in Paris, and Mrs. Smith-Hutton. "Captain Smith-Hutton pleased the townspeople of Loue by putting on full uniform and placing flowers on the monument to the French and American dead," pens Mrs. Dunlap.

Author of "Once There Was a Village," "Encore for Love" and, most recently, "And Ride Forth Singing," Katherine Dunlap has been informed that the last-named book is to be published in London.

LONDON:

A message from Mr. and Mrs. Auguste Boas, on a European holiday, taking in all the sights of the British capital and being terribly impressed by the solemnity and beauty of the "ceremony of the keys" in the Tower of London, a ritual that has persisted for 700 years.

LONDON AGAIN:

Ralph Forster, staying at the Overseas Club, St. James's, shows he's keeping up with the Washington news by sending a clipping from the Daily Express, circulation 4,000,000, with front page picture and story about our own Perle Mesta, Minister-designate to Luxembourg.

And now that we're on the subject, few people know that some weeks ago Mrs. Mesta received a gold medal, enameled in blue and inscribed "To the best-dressed hostess in America, Perle Mesta, 1949."

The other side of the Oscar reveals the donors—the Fashion Academy of New York.

Always well dressed with a perfect sense of fitness as to type, Perle Mesta has in the last few months taken on a new interest in clothes. Some 20 or 30 pounds lighter, she really shows off her Adrians and Diors' creations of her favorite designers.

Congress Is on Vacation, Bit by Bit

By Genevieve Reynolds

DON'T count heavily on snagging a Senator as an extra man for your dinners and dances this summer. Only a few of the legislators will be "summer bachelors." A check with some of the 50 lawmakers' wives reveals that the majority will remain in the Capital until Congress adjourns.

Most of the senatorial wives confessed to an unplanned summer due to the uncertainty about when Congress will quit legislating. Wives' estimates ran from August 15 to Labor Day.

Martha Taft, wife of Ohio Senator Robert Taft, is one who will shake the humidity out of her hair and take off for foreign and cooler climes. She will leave New York Thursday via plane for Dublin, Ireland, for a month's visit with her son, William Howard Taft, who works with the ECA there.

Currently in Rome are Senator and Mrs. Allen J. Ellender. The Louisiana Senator is attending the second assembly of the World Health Organization now in session in the Italian Capital. They will be there for three or four weeks and then will return to Washington. From there on, their plans depend upon the Senate.

Some Who Will Be Here

Staying in town until congressional sessions end will be Mrs. Walter George, Mrs. Raymond Baldwin, Mrs. Homer Capehart, Mrs. Forest C. Donnell, Mrs. Sheridan Downey, Mrs. Homer Ferguson, Mrs. Styles Bridges, Mrs. Guy M. Gillette, Mrs. Chan Gurney, Mrs. Carl Hayden, Mrs. Bourke B. Hickenlooper, Mrs. Lister Hill, Mrs. Olin D. Johnston, Mrs. James P. Kem, Mrs. Scott Lucas, Mrs. Ernest W. McFarland, Mrs. Pat McCarran, Mrs. Joseph C. O'Mahoney, Mrs. John J. Sparkman, Mrs. Kenneth S. Wherry, Mrs. Karl Mundt, Mrs. J. William Fulbright, Mrs. Brien McMahon and Mrs. Dennis Chavez.

Several of the senatorial wives who live in nearby States will divide their time between the Capital and their home towns, or closeby resorts.

Mrs. Eugene Millikin, wife of the Colorado Senator, will take a house at Rehoboth Beach in July, hoping that the Senator can join her there for the weekends. Mrs. Millikin's son, K. C. Schuyler, jr. and his wife are visiting the Millikins here over the weekend en route to their home in Denver. The Schuylers have been having a look see at New York City.

Mrs. Saltonstall Returning

Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall expects to return from her home in Dover, Mass., July 5, to await Senate adjournment.

Mrs. J. Allen Frear, jr., will be back and forth between her Delaware home and Washington. Mrs. Henry Cabot Lodge, jr., will spend the July Fourth holidays in Massachusetts, then return here.

And while Senator George goes on his yearly fishing trip to Nantucket, Mass., over July 4, Mrs. George will bask on the beach at Nags Head, N. C. Mrs. G. finds the Saturday night barefoot dances at Nags Head amusing, but although she loves to dance, she doesn't try the barefoot techique. Except for the holiday junket, she will be here for the duration of the sessions.

Miss Henrietta Hill arrived Thursday from a stay at Virginia Beach and will be here with her parents, Senator and Mrs. Lister Hill, until?

Vacation With Pay

The Capehart's attractive daughter, Pat, who will be a junior at the University of Maryland next fall, will leave this week for South East Harbor, Me. She will spend the summer working in the dining room at one of the resort hotels along with a large group of other college students.

Mrs. Olin D. Johnston, wife of the South Carolina Senator, who expects to stick it out here until the sessions end, is celebrating a special event this week. It's none other than the Washington opening of the picture, "The Big Cat," written and produced by youthful William Moss. The Texas-born author and producer is Mrs. Johnston's nephew.

Dodging the withering, suffocating heat and humidity of the Nation's Capital are Mrs. Owen Brewster, Mrs. Howard McGrath, Mrs. Wayne Morse, Mrs. Robert S. Kerr, Mrs. William S. Knowland.

Mrs. Kerr gave up fathoming the mind of Congress and has decided to leave July 1 for her summer place near Pequot Lake in northern Minnesota. Meantime, she's attending a weekend class reunion in Denver, but will return for a few days before leaving for the Gopher State.

Mrs. Wayne Morse left Friday for her home in Oregon, to spend the summer. She and her daughters, Judith 15 and Amy 13, are motoring along the northern route and will make stopovers in Canada and Wisconsin. Mrs. Hubert Humphrey already is in Minnesota for the summer. Mrs. Russell B. Long will spend the summer at her home in Louisiana.

Art League Garden Class Opens July 13 at Studio

By Virginia Cullen

REHOBOTH BEACH, Del., June 25.—Each year the enterprising Rehoboth Art League endeavors to broaden its scope in the pursuits of the arts. With a background of more than a decade of activities the league will promote this season, starting next month, a garden course for the benefit of those who take pride in cultivating flower gardens around their summer homes. So a full-fledged "Garden Course" will get under way July 13 in the new studio building overlooking the picturesque Henlopen Acres Yacht Basin.

The league was inspired by the public response to lectures given last season by the Sussex Gardeners Club, the largest horticultural group of the Cape Henlopen area, and decided to add to the curriculum a series of seven weekly lectures and demonstrations. The first one will be a flower arrangement class directed by one of the Sussex Gardeners Club members, Mrs. Raymond R. Atkins of Lewes. Other leaders in the series will be Mrs. Elinor Thompson Donaldson, Washington landscape architect, and Miss Mary Louise Speed of Louisville, Ky. During the war Mrs. Donaldson organized courses on Victory Gardening for the American Woman's Voluntary Services, and also conducted a series of garden lectures for All Hallow's Guild of the Washington Cathedral.

Miss Speed has studied landscape architecture at the University of London and is now president of the Louisville Association of Landscape Architects. The garden course will also include talks by an agricultural and soil specialist, Charles Mills of Rehoboth Beach, who prepared for his profession at the University of Illinois.

The largest influx so far of summer vacationists, who have established themselves for the season, are people from the Capital area. The family of Senor Dr. Don Ismael Gonzalez-Arevalo, Ambassador from Guatemala, has arrived for the season. They have taken this year the Raymond cottage on Columbia ave., in the pines section of the resort.

Mr. James John Fisher, a commercial artist of Takoma Park, Md., will arrive around July 1 with his family, and will occupy for two weeks the Commodore cottage on Maryland ave.

Mr. James E. Jones, jr., a Washington real estate operator and builder, has leased the Wilson cottage on Columbia ave. for the season.

The cottage of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer H. Smith on Virginia ave. has been leased for the summer by Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Beer of Baltimore.

Mr. and Mrs. Arden E. Bing of Washington, who own a resort home on Henlopen ave., are now here for the season.

The Rehoboth Beach Country Club was the scene this afternoon of the wedding reception of Miss Nancy Elizabeth Knapp of Lewes, whose marriage to Mr. Olin Sudler Allen 2d of Claymont, Del., took place at high noon in historic Lewes Presbyterian Church.

Miss Knapp is the daughter of one of Delaware's best known "orchard kings," Mr. Leslie George Knapp, and Mrs. Knapp of Nassau, near Lewes. Mr. Allen is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Bartholomew M. Allen of Claymont. The bridegroom is a graduate of Gettysburg College and is now a medical student at Temple University, Philadelphia.

Plans for the annual summer card party of the Village Improvement Association, largest woman's club of Rehoboth Beach, are already under way. Mrs. George W. Till has been named general chairman of the party in the boardwalk clubhouse on July 20. As a goodly slice of the membership is drawn from the summer colony, the affair is one of the largest social events of the resort season. The dates for the annual V. I. A. summer exhibition of art have also been established, and this year will be held in the clubhouse from July 7 to August 21. Miss Laura Cowell, New York art teacher summering on Lewes Beach, has been named chairman of exhibits this year, and Mrs. W. S. Yarnall of Rehoboth was appointed chairman of hostesses to receive visitors each day.

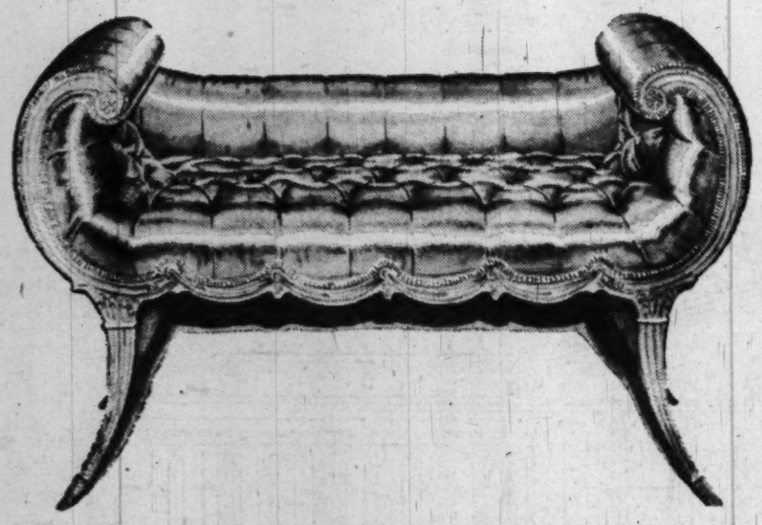
Napoleon was an impressionable conqueror



Upon his return from his military campaign in Egypt, the Corsican corporal, adapted the architectural patterns and forms of the Nile country. Upon a direct edict from him, the Empire period was born, with its lavish use of fine fabrics, graceful lines and delicate carvings. The tufted bench above in pickled mahogany, covered in satin, is characteristic of that period.

There's No Place in Washington Like an Air-Conditioned Home

By Elizabeth Maguire

SENORA DE POCATERRA, wife of the Venezuelan Ambassador, is chatelaine of Washington's only air-cooled embassy, and she doubtless agrees there's no place like home. She arrived in town Tuesday accompanied by her 12-year-old daughter, Soledad.

Canadian-born, the Ambassadress has a home in Montreal, where the climate is what one would expect in a northern country—cool. And in Venezuela, her real home, the climate year round is like spring in Washington, with an added something that sparkles.

Senora de Pocaterra has a charming manner. She is likeable and she has a pretty face, brown eyes and dark curly hair. Her jewels are lovely and her hats are French. Like most aristocrats in her country, she shops in Paris.

On Thursday at a party at the Nicaraguan Embassy she wore a hat as French as her frock and slender black pumps. Her aquamarines from Brazil were set in thin frames of gold, and her 3-inch bracelet was of tiny gold nuggets linked closely together.

She met her husband, she said, when he was in exile in Canada. Gomez, dictator of Venezuela for 27 years, imprisoned Jose Procaterra from 1919 to 1922. From 1923 to 1936 the latter lived in Canada teaching at the University of Montreal. Gomez died in December 1935, and in February 1936, Pocaterra was elected Senator of his native state without running for office and while still living in Canada.

He returned to Venezuela to take up his new duties, and after that he filled a number of top positions. He served as Minister of Labor, as president of the state of Carabobo, and as Ambassador to Great Britain, Russia and Brazil. Before coming to Washington his post was Brazil.

Others of Interest

OTHER guests of interest at the Nicaraguan Embassy on Thursday were the Ambassador of Italy and Signora Tarchiani, who are planning a trip abroad some time in July. Mme. Bonnet, wife of the French Ambassador, looked a cool dream in simple white and navy blue. Her niece, charming Sophie Mayer, is sailing July 7 on the De Grasse for a summer in Switzerland.

The Military Attache of the Dominican Embassy and Senora de Feliz, who had hosted a party the day before, were also at the Nicaraguan fete. And Senorita Anita Ramirez of Panama in a white frock with print design of tipped cocktail glasses, a red cherry in each.

Since the appointment of Mrs. George Mesta as Minister to Luxembourg, public interest in the Grand Duchy has greatly increased. Grand Duchess Charlotte, ruler of the tiny country, has six children ranging in age from 28 to 20, all good looking and unmarried. The eldest is the hereditary Grand Duke, Prince Jeane, who is said to be very handsome. Then there are three princesses, a prince, and another princess.

Grand Duchess Charlotte is of the Nassau family on her father's side, and a cousin of the Dutch royal family. Her mother was Portuguese, Princess Marie Anne of Braganza, and her husband is Prince Felix of Bourbon-Parma. During the war, the Grand Duchess and her husband and six children lived in Canada in exile outside of Quebec.

Pakistan Attache Arrives

BRIGADIER NAWABZADA AGHA KHAN RAZA arrived in Washington on Wednesday to assume his duties as Military Attache to Pakistan's Ambassador to Washington, M. A. H. Ispahani.

Born in Lyallpur in 1910, Brigadier Raza was educated at Government College, Lahore. He was selected for army training at the Royal Military Academy, Sandhurst, England. As a Cavalry officer he became Regimental Commander of the Indian Armoured Corps Training Center, Lucknow, and the LAC Tank School, Babina.

During the war, he served in Burma, Indo-China and Malaya. On the partition of India and Pakistan, he was appointed station commander of Lahore.

Farewell to Mme. de Sugny

MME. Genevieve de Sugny was given a farewell party on Friday by George Baker. She is leaving soon for California, where she will spend summers at Pebble Beach, winters in San Francisco.

Friday's party was held in Mr. Baker's Georgetown garden between 6 and 8. Among those who dropped by were beautiful Signora Paresce, wife of the Italian Attache, Mr. and Mrs. Jean-Claude Winckler of the French Embassy, Mrs. William Mann, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Tartiere, Capt. and Mrs. Richard Coleridge, and handsome Paul Jolles of the Swiss Legation.

Goodwill Industries Class Discusses Peter Hunt Decor

Miss Julia Ann Halloran and Miss Mary Lou Rutledge gave lessons in Peter Hunt furniture decoration last week to art-minded employes at the Davis Memorial Goodwill Industries workshop. Miss Halloran, the debutante daughter of Comdr. and Mrs. Edward Roosevelt Halloran, who will leave tomorrow for Panama with her parents, and Miss Rutledge, who is the daughter of Supreme Court Justice Wiley Rutledge and Mrs. Rutledge, showed the handicapped employes how to redecorate old chairs, chests, screens, etc., with the simple peasant-style designs popularized by Peter Hunt. Finished articles will be sold in the Goodwill's five retail stores in the District, Rockville, Md., and Alexandria, Va.

The new art project at the industries is being sponsored by the Goodwill Guild, of which Mrs. Rutledge is president.

something SOLID to lean on

It's all right to be sophisticated and say money isn't everything.

At the same time, it's a great comfort to know it's there when you need it. It gives you a solid feeling. It saves you a lot of worry.

The man who goes along week after week without saving a dollar is acting childish. A mere $3.75 a week invested in United States Savings Bonds adds up to $2163.45 in ten years. That's a nice piece of money. And it's easy to acquire.

Be sensible. Start putting aside a little every payday. Do it through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work or the Bond-A-Month Plan where you bank.

As President Truman said . . . "Every bond delivered is a concrete assurance that the citizen buyer has that much more right to feel secure about the future—his own and his country's."

Put more opportunity in your future! Invest in U.S. Savings Bonds

How to care for the "LIFELINE" of your Electrical Appliances

SAVE CORD WEAR: Disconnect cord from outlet each time you finish using a cooking or heating appliance. When disconnecting, grasp the plug, not the cord, and pull straight. When you do that there's no strain on the cord. If it sticks, rock plug gently from side to side as you pull.

HANDLE WITH CARE: Don't yank cord, kink, twist or knot it. If cord is permanently attached to appliance, wrap loosely around appliance after it has cooled. Never handle any cord with wet hands. Appliance cords can be inexpensively replaced by your electrical dealer or repair shop.

ABOUT EXTENSION CORDS: When you use extension cords, watch out for wear and check for frayed ends. If they fray they should be taped with friction tape or replaced. Do not nail cords to walls or baseboard permanently. When it is necessary to fasten them temporarily, always use fibre-insulated fasteners.

REMEMBER: We cheerfully show you how to get the most out of your Electric Appliances. Just call NAtional 8800 and ask for Home Service Bureau whenever you want help or advice.

P.S. Electric appliances need "adequate wiring"—plenty of convenient outlets and big enough wires. If in doubt about your home, check with Home Service for free information on A. W.

Fraternities Go on Trial at Amherst College

By Fred M. Hechinger

FRATERNITIES at our colleges, among the oldest social-academic institutions, are standing a severe trial just now. They have been cursed as incubators of undemocratic snobbery—and worse; they have been hailed as an all-important tail desperately needed to wag the academic dog. They themselves have—nationally—made biased blunders which have helped the partisans on either extreme to peddle their dogma.

Among the colleges confronted with the issue Amherst has taken the brave, scholarly and reasonable step of examining the problem, debating it and offering the findings to all the world in an honest booklet, "Fraternities at Amherst." The action taken may not be final or even a fully satisfactory answer for every campus, but it serves as a guide.

'Fraternity' College

AMHERST is known as a "fraternity college," with the first local chapter founded in 1832. The campus is surrounded with attractive "frat" houses which claim the membership of more than 90 per cent of the three upper classes and house nearly half of the normal student body of 90. Cooperation with faculty, administration and student council is close and cordial.

Thus the fraternities at Amherst play an important social and community part: they sponsor competition in 15 sports; they conduct forums, talks and debates; they invite outside guests, entertain the faculty, and even play host to children of nearby orphanages on several occasions every year.

They have undoubtedly committed their share of minor and major offenses. After the war the question was raised whether or not the fraternities were to be reopened. The vote was split: the majority of the faculty said "No"; an alumni subcommittee seconded that opinion; but 80 per cent of the alumni favored the retention of the fraternities.

"It is doubtful that the fraternities of any campus have ever been under so complete and careful scrutiny," says the Amherst report. The trustees studied all the findings and decided (1) that the fraternities have failed markedly in recent years to make a positive contribution to college life; (2) that the interests of the college can best be served at this time by a program of radical reform rather than one of abolition, with its inevitable, untried substitutes.

Only If They Fail

ONLY if the new program for Amherst fraternities should fail. "the irrevocable step of abolition (will) be taken." Those familiar with the spirit and tradition of Amherst will doubt that the reform movement could possibly fail.

Among the new conditions for the reopened fraternities are: facilities which will permit all and any student of the three upper classes to join a fraternity if he so desires; a reorganized student council which will be free of any fraternity representation; control over fraternity houses by the college administration equal to that over the college dormitories; reduction of dues and special costs; and the establishment of a system of faculty advisers, a code of conduct and a standing committee of the trustees for the constant review of fraternity matters.

No freshman shall be permitted to be pledged by or to join any fraternity. Freshman "rushing" for membership is not to begin until the last quarter of the freshman year.

Some Results Clear

BY NOW several direct results of Amherst's adult handling of the problem are clear. "Deferred rushing" of freshmen has eliminated an interference with academic work at a time when a maximum of "adjustment" is called for. In addition, the incoming group is given a chance to be "molded into a class" for the good of overall campus life. "Victims" themselves have time to make an intelligent choice.

The new "adviser system" has strengthened student faculty relations even further.

But perhaps most important, the critical self-appraisal of the Amherst fraternities has given them the stamina to resist the "national organization" effectively in the grave matter of discrimination.

"The belief that discrimination on the basis of race, creed, and color has no proper place on the campus is the background of what developed . . . into a national controversy," says the report. ". . . Several of the fraternities have constitutional clauses which raise such (discriminatory) barriers, and it is toward the removal of these restrictions that the trustee vote was directed."

Refuse to Toe Mark

IN 1946 the Amherst chapter of Delta Tau Delta was refused permission to reopen by the national office. Its charter was revoked because the college opposed the "financial and discrimination policies" of the national fraternity. But the Amherst chapter upheld its independence, changed its name to Kappa Theta and continued to operate successfully.

In 1948 Amherst's Phi Kappa Psi pledged a Negro. Other charters in the country objected. The fraternity's national convention directed the Amherst chapter not to initiate the student.

After complete discussion and debate the Amherst chapter voted unanimously to initiate the Negro pledge and told the national office of their action. The fraternity suspended the chapter and revoked its charter. The group promptly organized as a local fraternity and continues unhampered as Phi Alpha Psi.

"In the nineteenth century the fraternities added zest and distinction to the intellectual life of the college," concludes the Amherst report. "They set a high standard of conduct and brotherhood. It is the hope of those concerned with the fraternities that they may play a similar role in the more complicated context of college life in the coming decades."

Jap War Criminals Learn About Democracy

By O. H. P. King

TOKYO, June 25 (AP).—Japanese war criminals are going to school to learn about democracy.

United States Eighth Army officials say more than half of the 1000 prisoners in Sugamo Prison have enrolled in the 57 educational courses offered there.

The interest is not feigned to avoid prison chores, because instruction is given only during the prisoners' normal hours of rest. Lifers as well as those serving short terms are attending.

The school program is divided into library, cultural, language and vocational departments.

The prisoners see Japanese movies and the same American documentary films shown in schools and colleges. They have obtained 300 books in English from the occupation education section, plus hundreds of surplus army texts and books from various Japanese agencies.

In addition, they mimeograph their own instruction materials and publish a mimeographed weekly paper.

Courses include English grammar and conversation, commerce, Bible study, bookkeeping, law, music, radio, literature, carpentry, drafting metalwork, electricity and Japanese shorthand.

The school began experimentally in February but formally opened in May.

Dr. Louis Q. Moss of Philadelphia, who has been serving as consultant, said the school was organized "to give prisoners every opportunity to study democratic procedures so that those serving less than life terms will better understand the life they will enter upon completing their sentences."

To Study in U. S.

Dr. V. Oldfelt, pediatrician, of Stockholm, Sweden, who received the Virginia C. Gildersleeve International Fellowship, will come to the United States this fall to study virus diseases at the Children's Hospital, Philadelphia.

Tuition Fee Raised

Mount Holyoke College's board of trutsees has voted to raise the tuition and board and room fees to $1600 in September, Dr. Roswell Gray Ham, president of the college, announced last week.

At Stuyvesant School

Where the 'Foreigner' Isn't Foreign

"YI-YI-YI! Look at the Chinaman!"

A boy in his teens stood in the street in Warrenton, Va., a short time ago and shouted his ageless imprecation at an olive-skinned 15-year-old as he walked to church with two other boys from Stuyvesant School.

His taunts brought looks of bewilderment to all three; then amusement. Kid stuff—dumb kid stuff! It wasn't that the target of his gibes was Siamese and to the Stuyvesant boys, such national distinctions had ceased to matter. The Siamese boy, like the 18 other "foreign" boys from 17 different countries at the Virginia school, was one of them. That was all that mattered.

Speak at Clubs

WARRENTON is in the rolling "horse country" of Virginia, 40 miles from Washington.

Recently the Rotary Club of Warrenton invited Stuyvesant's foreign-born boys to speak before it. The meeting was so successful that invitations came to Headmaster Donald A. Williamson from other Rotary clubs, church groups and civic organizations in the area. In the space of two months Stuyvesant's junior good will ambassadors spoke before 16 different church, social and business groups.

Simply, in their own words, the Stuyvesant boys began to tell about their own lands and about their reactions to life in the United States.

Fifteen-year-old Odoardo Leon-Ponte, from Venezuela, told the Rotarians that the "thing he liked best about the United States" was its tolerance on the question of chaperones. "In most Latin-American countries," he said, "when we take a girl to the show we must take her mother or sister or brother along, too. It's more fun here."

Another young Latin-American praised the greater freedom he had found in the United States. "Here," he said, "you can say what you think. I like that."

Honest Affection

A 16-YEAR-OLD from one of the Communist-dominated countries said: "I only wish that the leaders of my country could have had the opportunity that I have had—to come here and meet the people of the United States and live with them. I think it would make a big difference in their attitude."

But, in every talk, sincere, honest affection for their native lands was expressed by these boys.

"I hope," said 12-year-old Johnny Bult, from Switzerland, "that I shall someday come to love the United States as much as I love my country."

At one public high school in Virginia, Stuyvesant boys from Siam, Czechoslovakia and Holland appeared on a scheduled 30-minute program. So great was the interest of their listeners that, at the principal's request, they stayed to answer questions about their native countries for nearly two hours.

Mutual Respect

THE experience at Stuyvesant, where United States boys live with these youthful goodwill ambassadors, has been revealing. Not only is there mutual respect but there is an almost total disregard of so-called national differences. The very word "foreigner" has lost caste. National prejudices have been shed by the boys as easily as they shed their clothes at night. Stuyvesant remains a thoroughly American school, but the boys from other countries are part of the family. No one thinks of them, any longer, as strangers.

Headmaster Williamson and his associates have been encouraging boys from the United States to "get to know" boys from other countries for four years now.

The results have exceeded all expectations. Living together in the peculiar intimacy of a small boarding school where food, study, recreation and rest are shared in common, boys from the United States and from Siam, Egypt, China, Puerto Rico, Ecuador, Mexico, Peru, Bolivia, Venezuela, the Dominion Republic, Holland, France, Czechoslovakia, Switzerland, Colombia and Australia have demonstrated the relative insignificance of national differences. More importantly, they have shown in a practical way that young people—usually called upon to fight the wars—can get along very well with neighbors from other lands, once they know them.

Speedwritng Training

The Radcliffe College appointment bureau, which for several years has conducted a summer secretarial school, will offer from June 27 to August 5 intensive training in speedwriting instead of shorthand, available in previous years, plus typing. Enrollment is open to qualified college students or graduates.

Young Student Makes More Than Teacher at This School

By Bob Thomas

HOLLYWOOD, June 25 (AP).—How would you like to conduct a school where the students earn more than you do?

That's the unusual occupation of Mary MacDonald, who has been head of the MGM studio school since 1932. Among her student body of eight are such names as Margaret O'Brien, Dean Stockwell, Claude Jarman, jr., and the girl we'd most like to stay after school with—Elizabeth Taylor.

Miss MacDonald's is no little red schoolhouse, red being an unpopular shade in Hollywood these days. It's cream-colored of sturdy stucco, located but a yo-yo's throw from the stages where the students toil in their nonstudying hours.

The film star-students are required to attend school from 9 to 12 in the morning. High school pupils, like Miss Taylor, have to do homework as well. (Hmm, wonder if she needs any help with her English lit.)

Recalls Stars

Miss MacDonald, who formerly taught in Philippine and Los Angeles schools, looks young for having instructed child actors for 17 years. She has seen such students as Lana Turner, Judy Garland, Mickey Rooney, Freddie Bartholomew, Jackie Cooper and Jane Powell come and go. I asked her which were the brightest.

"Now," she replied with schoolteacher caution, "you wouldn't want me to say that. Think how the ones I didn't name would feel." She also declined to name the dumbest.

Does she think actors are smarter than ordinary students?

"Not necessarily. They are about the same as other children, except in one regard. They have much more presence, and meet people much more easily."

Does she have any unusual disciplinary problems?

"No, the students are generally cooperative. Sometimes there are those who get some bad advice, from people who might say, 'Why do you mind her?—you're making more money than she is.' But most of our problems can be worked out. I have never had to use force yet."

Young Jarman, who was perusing his algebra nearby, suggested a sure way of disciplining the studio students—"put 'em on suspension."

Miss MacDonald tries to keep the school like a normal one. Generally a graduation class consists of one, but there is a class will and prophecy and a special party. Graduates then receive their diplomas at the closest city high school, University High.

Some to College

SOME of her students are equipped to go on to college and do so. But some, like Rooney, quit high school at 18, when they no longer have to attend.

"Mickey was doing very well in his last year and could have graduated in a year," she recalled. "I urged him to continue, because I believed it would make a lot of difference in his later life. But I was just one small voice against many others."

Miss MacDonald believes strongly in the importance of education to acting. "The more understanding and knowledge, the greater the actor," she stressed.

The school's only Hollywood touch is in recreation. Facilities are limited and the only sport is ping-pong.

Imagine—ping-pong with Elizabeth Taylor!

Going-Away Parties Fill Calendar

Annapolis, Md., June 25.—At this season of the year, departure from Annapolis of many service people provides excuse for some delightful parties. A dinner given recently at the Officers' Club by heads of department at the Naval Academy featured as guests of honor four of the most popular Navy couples on the station, Capt. and Mrs. Jesse R. Wallace, Capt. and Mrs. Frank T. Ward, Capt. and Mrs. William W. Hargrave and Capt. and Mrs. Rollo N. Norgaard.

Captain Wallace, who has been chief of staff at the Naval Academy and of the Severn River Naval Command, left this weekend to take over his new assignment as chief of staff of the Ninth Naval District at Great Lakes. Captain Ward, after serving as commandant of midshipmen for two years, has gone as chief of staff to the commander of the Fleet Air Wing at Jacksonville, Fla. The Norgaards are sailing for Oslo, Norway, where the captain will be naval attache. Captain Hargrave is retiring from the Navy, after 36 years of commissioned service, and expects to be settled with his family, in the Lynchburg, Va., area by the end of the summer. Captain Hargrave, whose latest tour of duty was as senior medical officer at the Navay Academy and head of the department of hygiene, will be county health officer of Campbell and Charlotte Counties, Virginia. He plans to leave Annapolis at the end of this month, but Mrs. Hargrave and their two sons, William Walter, jr., and Louis, will remain with Mrs. J. B. Edward of 270 King George st. for July and most of August.

Annapolis, well-known throughout the East as a yachting center, welcomed some 40-odd boats in the Newport-Annapolis race, which started last Saturday from Newport. The first arrivals reached here Tuesday and Wednesday, and all craft in the event were in by yesterday morning. There are 13 local yachts in the race, and the one which makes the best corrected time in Classes A, B, or C will be awarded the trophy presented by Gov. William Preston Lane, jr., of Maryland.

The visitors were entertained by the Annapolis Yacht Club and the United States Naval Academy. The Annapolis Yacht Club held a buffet supper on Thursday evening, and the Academy entertained last night in Hubbard Hall, when all the awards were presented.

Outstanding among the many weddings announced here recently is that of Mrs. Natalie Hayman Taylor of Miami, Fla., and Capt. Hollis Moseley Cooley, USN (retired) of Wardour, which took place on Tuesday, June 14, at the Navy Chapel in Washington, D. C., with the Chief of Chaplains, Rear Admiral William N. Thomas, USN, officiating. Only the immediate families of the bride and bridegroom were present.

Captain and Mrs. Cooley will make their home in Wardour.

The Service Set

One Sure Way To Beat Heat—Leave Town!

By Norma Lanum

THE BEST WAY to beat the heat in Washington, most will agree, is to leave it—go off to a cooler clime where the summer season is something to look forward to.

And a few of the lucky service families in town are being transferred at the onset of the heat wave to posts with more tolerable climates.

The Marine Corps' popular Maj. Gen. and Mrs. William T. Clement, for example, have received a timely transfer to the West Coast. The general, who has headed Marine recruiting in this city, will take over as commanding general of the recruit depot at San Diego. And California-born Mrs. Clement couldn't be more pleased about the assignment.

The Clements, together with their daughter, Nancy, will leave next week for a month's vacation in Nantucket before motoring to their new base.

Capt. and Mrs. C. Carter Anderson are all set to move July 5 from their house on 34th st. to Evanston, Ill., where they'll be within walking distance to Lake Michigan's suburban beaches. Captain Anderson will serve as industrial manager of the Ninth Naval District with headquarters in Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy F. Bailey, Mrs. Howard Yeager's parents, who have been visiting Captain and Mrs. Yeager for the past two months, will leave the first of July. They'll spend the next two months in New London, Conn., with their other daughter and her husband, Comdr. and Mrs. Alexander L. Redon.

Second Son Born to George Graham Humes

Mr. and Mrs. George Graham Hume of Washington announce the birth of a son on June 17 at Columbia Hospital. Another son, Britton, age 6, is a student at Potomac School.

About Removing Dye Stains

Recently, when trying to put a transfer design on a dress I wanted to embroider, the design came out too dim to follow. I should like to take off the whole design and begin from scratch again. Can you tell me how the old design may be removed, since ordinary washing won't do it. C. M. L.

The dyes in transfer are made to be removed by washing so I suggest you lay the part of the dress with the design on it on a flat surface and brush it with mild soap suds in water. If this doesn't remove it and the material is white or a fast color not likely to be affected by a mild bleach, try that. If cotton or linen, use a household bleach. Use one part bleach and four parts water. If rayon, use sodium perborate, 4 tablespoons of perborate to 2 cups water.

How would you advise washing a dress made of cotton taffeta so that the iridescence and body of the fabric will not be lost? I met someone with a dress of the same material and was amazed to see what laundering had done. I hesitate to launder my own dress of this fabric, and yet, drycleaning seems extravagant for a cotton dress which needs frequent attention. A. C. B.

The manufacturers recommend that this fabric be washed by hand in lukewarm water with a mild soap. Since this is a high grade cotton, there is no reason why it should not remain lovely with careful washing. If you have any doubts at all, I suggest you wash the belt or clip a piece from a seam and try washing it. If it is necessary to restore a little stiffness to the fabric after washing, starch it lightly after the last rinsing.

Will someone who has lived in Korea please tell me something of the climate and of living conditions there? What kind of clothing is needed? If one is going to reside there what things generally considered necessary for good housekeeping are not available there? I will appreciate any information on this subject. A. C. L.

Will some of our readers who have just returned from Korea give A. C. L. the benefit of their experience?

How can water spots be removed from a pure silk dress? E. B.

Sometimes these spots can be removed by rubbing the fabric between the fingers or scratching it with the fingernail. If this method doesn't bring improvement, dampen the material evenly with a moist cloth from the wrong side. When damp, press with a warm iron. Or, you could apply moisture by pressing with a heavy pressing cloth which has been dampened. The pressing cloth should be heavy enough to allow only the steam to reach the silk when pressed. In applying moisture to the silk, be sure to use a method which only dampens or steams, but does not wet the fabric.

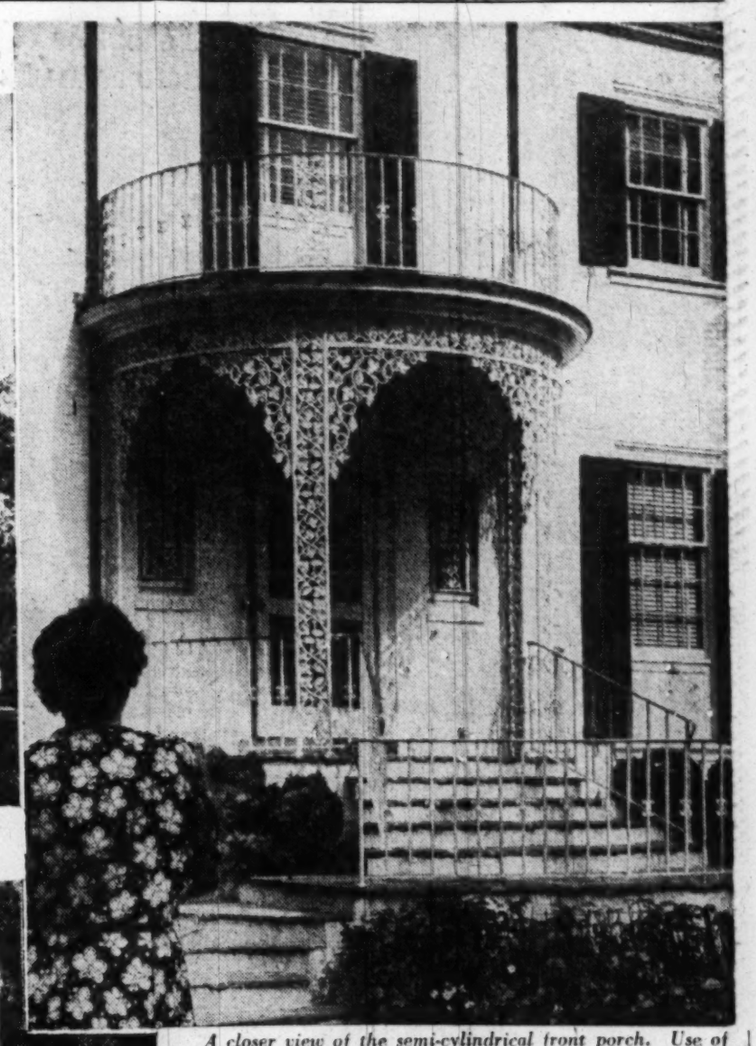
'Dream House' Rises Here

This beautifully modeled stair furnishes a Colonial setting for Miss Nellrose Broyhill, the daughter of the house. The flight is but one of many in the lavishly designed and furnished dwelling

Facade of the $250,000 Broyhill mansion somewhat resembles those of the fine old Tidewater (Va.) homes, but the porches with their wrought iron work are a New Orleans touch. You'd never guess from the staid exterior what a host of hyper-modern gadgets it contains, including an elevator



A closer view of the semi-cylindrical front porch. Use of the fretted iron work was the idea of Mrs. Nellie Broyhill, wife of the owner, who stands admiring the vine-like lines of the supports

Mansion in Arlington Cost Broyhill $250,000

By Don Olesen
Post Reporter

MR. BROYHILL's dream house is built.

Two years of the best labor, ideas, lumber, metal and furnishings went into the 28-room, New Orleans Colonial home Arlington developer M. T. Broyhill built at 261 N. Vermont st.

The finished product—they call it "Broy Hill"—is one of the most unusual modern homes in Greater Washington.

It's a dwelling of superlatives, from its $250,000 cost to its 10 bathrooms and its maze of ultra-modern gadgets.

It has a living room into which you could fit a small economy house. And an elevator from the basement to the third floor. And a two-way intercom system to most rooms you can dial like a telephone.

In a way, the home is also a monument to Broyhill, to the free enterprise system under which he built soundly for other people and prospered.

Mr. Broyhill's dream house lies not many blocks from Arlington's busy Lee hwy. It dominates a hill, surrounded by four acres of lawn and huge shade trees. From its roof, you catch a glimpse of Washington through a gap in the heavy woods.

Like Tidewater Mansions

IN APPEARANCE, Broyhill is not unlike some of the fine old plantation homes you see in Tidewater, Virginia.

Its charm begins at the front door. In the wrought iron work that decorates the semicylinidrical front porch, for example.

That touch was suggested by Broyhill's wife, Mrs. Nellie Broyhill. It's a grapevine pattern she copied after a trip to New Orleans. The same white-painted pattern trims the huge 23-by-29-foot open porch to one side of the house.

A visitor hardly senses the magnitude of the three-story home from the front hall. It's

Miss Broyhill emerges from the elevator running from basement to third floor. Just one of the up-to-date touches which make Broy Hill a place of convenience as well as charm

From the observation atop Broy Hill, its owner points out Washington to Mrs. and Miss Broyhill and one of the sons, Herbert. The estate crowns a 100-acre upland in Arlington. Horace W. Peaslee, Washington, was architect, and the Questers, Georgetown, interior decorators.

New Public Beach Is Constructed

DEVELOPMENT of a public white sand beach has been announced by the Loch Haven Beach Corp. on South River, overlooking Chesapeake Bay, 25 miles from Washington.

The new project which will furnish facilities for hundreds of bathers includes bath house, play grounds, parking facilities and new roadways.

Just North of Beverly Beach, Anne Arundel County, Loch Haven Beach was opened in 1946. It now is an established community where many persons live the year round. Boat owners enjoy a harbor protected against storms, and swimming and fishing are favorite sports.

2⅓ Million Building Labor Peak Forecast

A MID-YEAR REVIEW of construction prospects for 1949 reveals that labor requirements for new construction probably will reach a peak in August when construction contractors are expected to have around 2 1/3 million employes at work on new projects, Bureau of Labor Statistics announced yesetrday.

The bureau noted that the anticipated employment peak for 1949 will exceed last year's August peak of 2,253,000, and will represent a gain of about 300,000 from the May, 1949, employment estimate. Residential building is expected to account for about a third of all employes working at the site of new construction in August.

Construction activity, as measured by the total value of new public and private work put in place, may result in a new dollar-volume record of 19 billion dollars in 1949, according to joint estimates of the Departments of Labor and Commerce. Although this represents but a slight increase in dollar volume over the $18,775,000 total for 1948, it reflects a somewhat larger rise in physical volume in view of declining trends in costs and profit margins, plus a probable improvement in productivity.

The high expenditure total now expected for 1949 construction activity results principally from expansion by privately owned public utilities, and the growing importance of public construction, financed mainly by State and local governments.

Total private construction activity is estimated at $13,825,000 for 1949—5 per cent under the 1948 total, with reductions occurring in the dollar volume of both residential and nonresidential building.

Private nonfarm homebuilding this year is expected to remain at the $6,500,000 level earlier anticipated—10 per cent under last year's dollar volume but well in excess of that for the postwar years 1946 and 1947. Also remaining unchanged at this time is the Bureau of Labor Statistics' earlier estimate of 875,000 new permanent nonfarm dwelling units to be started in 1949, compared with the 931,000 started in 1948. Around 30,000 of the 1949 housing projects will be publicly financed, the majority by State and local housing authorities.

Anticipated private expenditures of one billion dollars for industrial construction are 28 per cent less than in 1948, with a smaller drop to $1,125,000 for commercial construction. However, large expenditure gains are in view for other private nonresidential construction, mainly churches, hospitals and institutions, and recreational facilities. Also, expanded construction programs of privately owned public utilities, chiefly electric light and power, and gas, are expected to result in an 8 per cent increase this year to $3,525,000.

Pronounced gains in most types of public construction, except military and naval, will contribute to the $5,175,000 expected for 1949, a jump of 23 per cent over 1948 estimates. Almost half the rise in public work this year will result from hospital and school construction.

Now for Little Girl's Domain

A LITTLE girl's room should contain a long storage unit. Even wall-length is not too long. It can provide both closed and open space for clothes, linens, books and toys. To encourage neatness, drawers and shelves should be low enough for the youngster to reach.

In addition to books, open shelves are ideal for toys that are played with more frequently. A small desk can be built into the unit and so can a simple dollhouse.

The dollhouse need not be elaborate—just a series of shelves with vertical partitions to divide it into rooms. Furnish it with miniature furniture from the 10-cent store and the little girl will be amused indefinitely. Since she will probably sit on the floor to play with her dollhouse, an asphalt tile floor is just right for her room.

Glassware on Shelves Transforms Windows

Not every living room window can boast a breath-taking view. If a sunny window overlooks an uninteresting spot, make it a picture in itself by displaying fine pieces of American glassware against it. Fit narrow shelves into the window frame, parallel to the moldings. Arrange vases, stemware, bowls and plates in interesting patterns of height and shapes.

The graceful lines of hand-made pieces designed in America today are distinguished enough to stand beside the antiques of the last 300 years. Goblets, sherbets and tumblers all contribute sparkle and charm to a living room as their brilliance catches and reflects both sunshine outdoors and colors inside the room.

Asphalt Tile Coming in Many Hues

By Harriet Morrison

IF IT'S a hard surface floor covering you want for the kitchen, hallway, children's room or even the whole house, you have a choice of asphalt tile, linoleum, rubber tile or vinyl plastic.

All are smooth, comfortable to walk on and simple to care for. All wear well if properly installed. Chances are that what you end up with will depend on the color and style and price that please you.

The good news in asphalt tile is that more colors are coming. Light yellow, red and green are the first light shades introduced by the Mastic Tile Corporation.

The light colors are slightly more expensive than the more familiar dark asphalt tiles but will be worth it to color-conscious home owners.

Asphalt Tiles

ASPHALT is the choice for basements or one-story houses without basements where concrete is in direct contact with the ground. Any moisture that might work through the foundation will not harm asphalt tiles.

Inlaid linoleum always is a favorite because the price and colors are good. Now more of the plain colors are appearing although the all-over marbleized patterns still are the most popular. Congoleum-Nairn now has 21 color families represented in its line of floor coverings.

New in linoleum is a tile made by Sloane-Blabon that amateurs can cement down themselves. The theory is that tiles are easier to handle than linoleum yard goods. Then, too, if tiles are installed in the kitchen, replacing a worn area in front of the sink is easier than replacing a worn area in a one-piece floor covering.

Rubber and Plastic

RUBBER tiles are both long-wearing, flexible, have a shiny finish and come in good colors. A design variation is possible with the Danbury Rubber Co.'s Wavedge tile. The curved edge is cut on a machine which certainly makes uniform designs easier than with hand-cut curves.

Pretty much in the luxury class are the vinyl plastic tiles. These come in gorgeous colors, and are impervious to most stains. They need no waxing.

This type of flooring usually costs three times as much as inlaid linoleum. Koroseal tiles belong in this plastic group and so do Armstrong's new Corlon tile and Delaware's Flor-ever.

If it's a hard-surface flooring you want, you should have no trouble finding the color and pattern you wish at the price you can afford.

Art Glass Sets Off Beauties of Room

When you choose living room accessories, select those which will complement, not distract attention from, the room itself. Against solid-color walls, delicate hand-blown glasses in handsome colors made by American craftsmen will echo the color in patterned draperies and furniture coverings. If the general color scheme is subdued, one large decorative piece, or two or three glasses will give a striking accent of contrast, yet the translucency of fine glass averts too heavy a concentration of color.

Mishaps Sure But Care Can Reduce Them

WHERE to put what in a house is an old, old battle. Families in thatch-roofed cottages, igloos, haciendas, penthouses or just plain houses, have common problems.

Where to throw a chicken bone, where to store a stew pot, where to put winter bedding in summer—these are the things homes are made of. Getting burned or scalded taking a kettle from the fire, slipping on a banana peel in one's own castle, tripping over furnishings or watching the house burn down—these things happen around the world.

But they need not happen as often as they do, say the safety experts. There are ways to manage the "things" of living—children's toys, discarded lamps, boxes of mementoes, cleaning supplies and all the rest of it, without creating fire hazards and without being a killjoy.

For one thing, a good sorting of attics, basements, garages and shelves that collect the clutter of living is necessary. The best solution may be to throw out or give away much of this clutter. Easier said than done. Ideally, a household should never let storage spaces become cluttered, but few households are ideal.

When you do sort the attic, don't light a match, warn home safety experts. Install an electric light or use a flashlight if the space is dark, to avoid accidents.

A simple item like a bathtub mat can prevent some dangerous falls. The Rubbermaid mat is nonslip to wet feet. Molded vacuum cups hold it down. Mats are flexible, light in weight and come in colors to match or contrast with the bathroom walls or fixtures.

Small rugs that slide underfoot can be anchored with a sponge rubber mat underlay.

Dark basement stairways or dark hallways can be given a bit of light by installing a low-wattage bulb. One type, 3 inches high, plugs into any wall outlet and has its own switch.

Drab Colors Can Drive a Man From Home

By Vivian Brown

YOU can lose your husband merely by using weird color schemes in your home.

Don't smile. It happens all the time, says Frances Lee, prominent interior decorator. Miss Lee has met the men—when they've been furnishing homes for their second wives.

Many a man flees a home because of garish or drab decor, she says. Whereas, if the little woman would just keep in mind that his favorite color is blue—any shade of blue ranging from ice blue to royal—she could keep him tucked in her apron pocket for a lifetime.

She says: "Women will put on their best bibs and tuckers, and a new makeup for that occasional night out with their husbands. But they never stop to think of ways to dress up the house so the master will stay home, and enjoy entertaining 'the boys,' if he must, right in his own living room or den."

Miss Lee says a limited budget is no excuse for not using more color in the home. Two dollars worth of chintz can dress up a whole room. A few colors taken from the chintz pattern and carried out in upholstery and carpet makes for delightful compatibility—providing the colors are not drab.

On the other hand, try not to make each room a different color, which is not the least bit restful. Use the same colors throughout the house, but use them in different ways.

Strong colors should be used like seasoning, she advises—dark fabrics on large pieces, such as a sofa or love seat, brighter fabrics, on small pieces. Brilliant colors can give a wonderful lift to dark furniture. Louis XIV and French provincial in lighter pinks, blues and gold leaf can pretty up dark walls. Early American furniture, showing lots of wood, needs cherry red, Kelly green, yellows and brilliant blues to complement it.

And, don't think it's silly to plan your husband's bathrobe or smoking jacket or your negligee to go with the color scheme. If everything is compatible and pleasant, you'll never find him glancing at those Reno time tables, Miss Lee says.

When you start noticing those first symptoms—if he sits on the end of the chair twitching nervously and take a later train home from the office each evening—your problem may be those orange-red walls in the bedroom or living room.

But give him blue combined with brilliant colors such as an ice blue with purple or Kelly green and you'll live together happily ever after. Or so says Miss Lee.

Baskit-Grill

Chicken at its juiciest best and enough to serve 12 people can all be grilled at the same time on a Baskit-grill. The grill consists of a metal frame on adjustable legs on which rest three stainless steel baskets, each long enough to hold two 3-pound fowls. The rack also will fold flat to hang in front of an indoor fireplace. One handle turns the three holders. Since the skin is not pierced in the basket method of cooking, all the natural juices are retained. Four stainless steel skewers come with the set. Baskit-grill is sold at $34.50.

Capacity, Freezer, Cubes Are Items to Check

OPEN OR CLOSED, refrigerators look pretty much alike. For this reason, buying one is rather confusing. Certainly there are a great number from which to choose.

Some are huge white boxes and others are low, compact cabinets. Some have two doors and others have one door. All are white. All consist of a cooling system inside an insulated steel box. Some have special fittings that others do not.

Size and price very likely will be determining factors if you are shopping for a new refrigerator. Considering the variety of foods we eat and the number of frozen foods in homes today, nothing less than a six-cubic-foot refrigerator is suggested for a family of two.

Experts suggest that a young couple set up housekeeping with at least an eight-cubic foot model. Some even say a nine-cubic-foot one. As the family grows, more refrigerator space will be needed. The theory is that the young family should have enough cooling space for the needs of babies.

Teen-Agers' Demands

CHILDREN in their teens also put demands on the refrigerator. At his age afternoon snacks and summer drinks are in order. If the refrigerator is large enough, every member of the family can find what he or she wants. If the box is large enough for summer use, chances are good that it is adequate for year-around use.

Most refrigerator manufacturers make several sizes. Prices vary according to size and interior fittings. Models with a 6-cubic-foot capacity are priced upward from $200. Models with an 11-cubic-foot capacity are over $300.

Two-door models usually cost slightly more than one-door ones. For the family fond of frozen foods with no space for a separate home freezer, the two-door-type refrigerator or the combination freezer-refrigerator has its advantages. In the upper freezing-compartment one can freeze foods, store packaged foods from the grocer and have a supply of ice cubes on hand.

There are one-door machines that have a separate inner door over a frozen-food compartment. In some models this compartment has a zero temperature and can be used for freezing foods. In other models this compartment can be used only for storing frozen foods. The temperature is always lower than the rest of the interior, but it may not be low enough to freeze foods. This is something to inquire about when you select a new refrigerator.

Check on Cubes

MANY models have a large tray that is wonderful for storing a quantity of ice cubes in readiness for a party. The number of ice-cube trays varies with different refrigerators. This also is something to watch for when buying one.

Other points to look for or ask about when shopping for a refrigerator are stain-proof and rust-proof shelves that can be adjusted in height, removed for cleaning, smooth interior surfaces that are easily cleaned and door handles that operate easily.

Video Makes Alterations in Home Decor

TELEVISION, which is changing some living habits of many Americans, is also changing the appearance of the homes they live in. The fabulous machine that makes the armchair "two on the aisle" at the theater, a seat at the ball park, or ringside at the arena is rearranging living rooms, transforming basements, rerouting home traffic, and turning seldom-used rooms into family gathering places.

Some home owners have installed television without interior decoration upheavals. Others have built whole new rooms around the receiver. All have been confronted by the big initial problem—where to put the set.

In many homes, conversion of the basement or part of it into a recreation-television room provides the answer. This permits the living room to function without the dimmed lights and "shushings" brought on by television. With floor and wall coverings of moisture-proof materials such as clay tile, the room can be kept dry and comfortable. tile will ease the floor cleaning task created by heavy traffic and chair scraping.

The sun room is a convenient spot for television. The set should be placed at one end of this usually small space so the whole family can view it on big telecast nights. This type of room is well situated to less expensive small screen sets that might not be adequate for the larger living room. Pull drapes adapt the room to daytime television. Growing plants on waterproof, weatherproof clay tile window sills add color and variety to the sun room-television room decor.

A few home owners, lacking a recreation room or sun room and preferring to free the living room for conversation and other family activities, have placed the set in the dining room. Basic consideration in a living room location is visibilty from major seating units. A divan across from the screen or a pair of armchairs in corners at right angles from it provide good vantage points. Folding chairs are where permanent extra chairs take too much space.

Rotor Fans Defeat the Heat

COOL night air can be drawn into any home in hot weather if equipment to do the job is properly designed.

When installed correctly, centrifugal fans can bring comfort on the hottest summer nights by drawing in low temperature air from outside and blowing out the air that has been held in the house and heated by the sun during the day.

Air changers can lower temperatures 15 degrees below those outside. They will operate for less than 2 cents an hour. They give especially good results when put into houses with mineral wool insulation in the walls.

The effect of the air changer on the hot, stuffy air that fills rooms in summer weather is likened to the way in which the interior of an automobile is cooled by a drive through the country on a summer evening.

The motion of the car pulls the cooler air through the windows, just as the rotating fins of the air changer bring in refreshing night breezes.

1949 Homes Excel Those of '20s

MOST new houses erected today excel those of 20 years ago in quality and convenience almost to the same degree that today's push-button radio or television set surpasses the static-tortured eight-dial receiver of the late 20's.

In the general inflation induced by World War II, prices for new houses increased 95 per cent through 1948, as compared with a 1935 to 1939 price base, according to a report of the National Association of Home Builders based on data compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Commerce. (Incidentally, clothing prices advanced 100 per cent in the same period, food 117 per cent and income 224 per cent.)

Quality Rises

AND if improved materials and design are taken into consideration, according to leading builders, and it is realized that today's new house generally is far superior to the one erected in 1939, or during the '20s, the relative increase for houses is considerably less than the statistical records would seem to indicate.

Or, matching improvements against the depreciated dollar, many new houses today might even be said to be relatively less expensive than their predecessors.

Picture windows, insulation, radiant heating, copper plumbing better wiring and many other improvements are integral parts of the modern new house, and in most cases an automatic washing machine, refrigerator, gas or electric range, and other appliances are almost standard equipment. But even if the costs of appliances are excluded from the price of the new house itself, their purchase is made easier by their inclusion in the sale. That is because this finances their acquisition in the 15, 20, or 25-year mortgage on the house instead of on a two or three-year payment plan.

Often Overlooked

WRESTLING with labor and material scarcities, many builders have neglected to emphasize that the architectural, structural, and functional improvements in today's new house offset much of its inflated-dollar increase.

Fabian M. Crystal, president of the Home Builders Association of Westchester, Inc., summed it up in a recent talk entitled "It Costs More But You Get More," which included the following observations:

"The house of 1949-50 is a great advance over the house of 1920. The laundry has come out of the cellar. It is part of the kitchen and milady puts the baby's rompers in the automatic washing machine while she takes the frozen food package out of the refrigerator and puts the lunch-time garbage in the disposal unit. She doesn't need a liniment. She's got electric power.

"The 1950 house is almost entirely automatic. The thermostat starts up the heat while the family is still asleep. They wake up to an electric alarm clock, take the chilled canned juice out of the refrigerator, finish breakfast in 20 minutes, and when Pa is ready for the train Ma slips an overcoat over her pajamas and gets into the car through the door from the laundry to the garage without going outdoors, and returns without any one suspecting she isn't dressed.

Done In a Trice

"ON A CHILLY November day she changes the screens to storm windows by merely pushing up the screen and pulling down the aluminum frame storm window, thereby saving Pa a sprained back, because he does not need a ladder to do the job.

"Then she puts the dishes in the automatic washer and goes off to phone and chat. Her electric stove cuts off automatically, so she roasts the chicken while she plays bridge.

"If her mother had to drive the car in the 20's she had to walk 100 feet in the rain to the garage; she had to go outdoors to the garbage can to empty her trash; she had no storm windows and the house was drafty and cold because she couldn't stoke a coal fire."

IT'S EASIER TO BUY a home today . . . Because wages have advanced faster than the cost of houses, home ownership is easier to reach for most workers than ever before says the National Association of Home Builders. People employed in general manufacturing had to work 296 weeks to earn the cost of a home in 1939, now their wages for 183 weeks will buy a new 1949 home. It took 209 weeks' wages for a bituminous coal miner to buy a home in 1939, but today his pay for only 129 weeks will do the trick. It's the same story in other lines of activity, too. As a result, home ownership is at an all-time high in the United States.

South Atlantic Building Costs Reported Cut

F. W. DODGE CORP. of New York reported yesterday on the basis of an opinion survey among builders that building costs in the South Atlantic States have declined 8 per cent in the last year with an expectancy of a further decrease of 10 per cent in the next five months.

The decline which has taken place affected both single-family houses and large-type buildings. The region is comprised of Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida.

While 35 per cent of the builders polled in this area find materials and equipment in adequate supply, some difficulty is being experienced by the remainder in procurement of one or more of the metals, metal products, masonry materials, lumber and millwork items.

Two years ago, when a similar survey was made by the Dodge corporation, builders generally reported that costs were being increased because of excessive time spent by them in shopping for and obtaining materials, and because of irregular deliveries.

Thirty-three per cent now report irregular deliveries still a cost factor, and 20 per cent indicate that excessive time is being spent in shopping for materials.

144 Sq. Ft. Suffice For Utility Room

A 12-by-12-foot space is adequate for a utility room, now so necessary in the basementless house. If the space can be larger, it can also be used as a child's play area in addition to its main functions of housing heating and laundry equipment and providing storage for articles normally kept in the basement.

Even if the house has a basement, a first-floor utility room saves countless steps, eliminates danger of falls on basement stairs, and is a valuable annex to the kitchen. Utility room uses are almost unlimited. But the fact that it houses work-a-day equipment does not mean it must be an unattractive, ugly workshop, for it should be one of the brightest, most pleasant rooms in the house.

Home Owners Should Select Medicine Cabinets Carefully

SIZE, construction and finish are the important items to check when buying a medicine cabinet for the bathroom, says the Plumbing and Heating Industries Bureau.

The cabinet should be as large as possible. Most homeowners realize too late when they move into their new or modernized home that their medicine cabinet has not kept up with other improvements. Like the bathroom itself, says the bureau, no medicine cabinet was ever too large.

Cabinet buyers should also look for such things as: Is it of one piece drawn seamless construction? Are the corners easy to clean? Are there cracks where moisture can settle and cause corrosion? Are the shelves removable for easy cleaning?

Customers should look for such things as the hinge construction, that is, whether the hinge is a common butt hinge or whether it is a full-length piano type hinge, and whether the hinge is enameled or stainless steel; whether the shelf supports are removable for easy cleaning and whether the shelf supports are stainless steel or plain white enameled, which are stationary, making it difficult to clean the cabinet.

It should not be assumed that a medicine cabinet is of top quality if the finish is merely white paint. A quality cabinet has a baked enamel finish applied over metal which has been bonderized, preferably bonderized after forming. Such a cabinet is highly resistant to corrosion.

Another point to consider is the economy of purchasing a lighted cabinet. With lighted medicine cabinets, there is no need for an overhead light or wall switch. The cabinet lights are sufficient to illuminate the entire bathroom. Customers should also check to see if the cabinet light fixtures have the convenience outlet for electric razor, space heater, etc.

Finally, the customer should not accept any lighted cabinet unless it bears the underwriters' label. This label should appear on the cabinet body or door back indicating that not only have the component parts been checked by underwriters but the completely assembled unit has been submitted for underwriters' inspection.

Chimney Cleaning Is Fire Prevention

NEGLECT is often a cause of chimney fires. Yearly cleaning and inspection are essential. All flues and pipes should be surrounded by fireproof material if they pass through wooden floors or partitions or are situated near them. Cracked bricks, a defective hearth or fireplace opening should be repaired as soon as noticed. Always use a fire screen to keep sparks or embers off rugs and floor and to protect clothing.

Never leave the house or retire for the night if there is a blazing fire in the fireplace. Wood ashes from a fireplace or stove are extremely treacherous.

Don't Cheer—She's A Bee

Female D. C. Carpenter Works Gladly—for Free

By Philip A. Orme

MY FIRST contact—a very figurative one—with a carpenter bee occurred one hot afternoon a short time ago while I was reading at an open window. A big plane just had passed over and as the thudding echoes died there came a deeper and more musical rumble, something like a 20,000-horse turbine humping a liner along.

I took this to be a second plane, probably the Army's latest supertransport. But the point of origin of the bourdon continued the same, so it couldn't be a skyship.

Looking up, I found myself face-to-antennae (through a screen) with the largest bee I'd ever seen. Made a bumble look humble. She (I found out later it had to be she) was a deep-chested brute standing at least an inch at the shoulder, with a mean compound eye and a hovering habit. Seemed interested in the wooden balcony overhanging the first floor.

For several minutes this reconnaissance continued, then Xylocopa Virginica—the wood-cutting Virginian—stopped feathering her vanes and autogyroed off.

The Sinister Sawdust

Several mornings later there was a little pile of sawdust on the ancestral threshold outside the storm door. This seemed sinister. There are articles of great value in my abode, including an excellent example of tourist trade Satsuma pottery worth at least 2 yen in depreciated Jap currency, a plated silver cocktail shaker, and this typewriter. And the Burleith upland is notoriously isolated and wild.

It dawned on me that the old international gang might have located me again and were commencing to bore from without to get at my treasure. But whence the sawdust I couldn't discover. The intricate dime-store lock was untampered with. There was not even to be found the customary note with dagger, death's head and white circle all complete. So it couldn't be The Gang. Yet day by day there was more sawdust.

Came a sombre 3 a. m. when phrases from Young's Night Thoughts pop to mind and earth seems contemplating with fatalistic calm her approaching heat-death. It was as forlornly quiet as Republican National headquarters last November 3, so much so that the footfalls of my insommiac cat thudded like horses' hoofs on a stable floor.

Out of the sable night pulsed a miniature rasping and whirring. I thought at first it was the stir of nestlings in the arborescent Virginia Creeper which is pulling down the mansion's facade. Then there succeeded just such a basso hum as I had heard one afternoon.

From the depths of childhood memories rose an article connected with carpenter bees. Prodigious creatures they are which think nothing of tunneling through seasoned wood a foot or more, using their mandibles in a way to shame a rat or termite. No human eating champion could hold a toothpick to them.

Not in Washington

BUT did apian carpenters work after dark? In this area their human counterparts certainly wouldn't except for heavy overtime and maybe a night differential, and just now don't lift a hammer even by day.

Next morning there was enough sawdust on the front sill to call for a pan and brush. I examined the storm door more closely and I located a hole drilled clear through. Could the bee be (inconvenient tongue, English) at large in the house? Then I found the tunnel proper, at right-angles to the first boring.

Things had gone far enough. I phoned one of those pundits out at Agriculture's Beltsville experimental station where bucolic calm engenders profound thought. He was a whizz on forest insects.

Yes, the evidence pointed to a carpenter bee. Yes, they probably would work by night as well as day. Most of them are tropical but the Virginica species is a nuisance this far north. The females, as is usual with the bug clan which, to hear some experts tell it, is going to inherit the earth from the ephemeral and fumbling bugs trying to run it at present, do all the heavy jobs.

The amazon in question, if she followed formula, would tunnel 12 inches or so and deposit eggs in little compartments which one by one she would seal off with masticated pulp as she worked toward the entrance. She would thoughtfully leave several loaves of bee bread in each cubiculum. When the larvae had developed and munched enough b. b. to harden their muscles they would chaw their way to freedom, going each his own way, since carpenter bees are notoriously morose and solitary.

How to end this visitation?

Well, said the forest insect spokesman, you take (1) of carbon disulphide several milligrams (2) of absorbent cotton a pledget, immerse (2) in (1) and insert in tunnel, where it forms a lethal gas. Then a putty pill. Later, slap on some plastic wood.

I have done all this. Mama Bee comes no more. Glooming heartbroken through the woods, perhaps.

Were there larvae in the tunnel? I'll never know. So I'll have none of the avenger's grim satisfaction in Poe's "Cask of Amontillado." He, at least, knew his pal Fortunato was safely circumvallated in the noisome crypt of the catacombs and had been so for half a century.

I ought to know about those larvae. If there is going to be a sending of bee larvae spooks I should have advance notice.

Glassware for Everyone

American glassmaking was revolutionized by a carpenter of Sandwich, Mass., who found in 1827 that glass could be hand-pressed in a mold. This brought glassware for the first time within the reach of every American home.

First American Mint

The first American "mint" was the glass factory founded at Jamestown, Va., about 1621 to make the handmade glass beads essential to trade with the Indians. This "mint" was destroyed in the Indian massacre of 1622.

Booklet Lists Ten Ways to Heat Home

A new free guide for home builders, "10 Ways to Heat Your New Home," has been published by the Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co., Minneapolis.

The booklet discusses all types of fuels, including solar energy, and all types of heating systems in popular use throughout the country.

The 24-page guide is written in non-technical language and illustrated with simple diagrams. It contains a list of "do's and don'ts" and includes a number of tips to help home builders discuss their heating plans with architects, contractors and heating dealers.

It also describes the various types of control systems available, including a newly developed electronic control 100 times more sensitive than standard thermostats, and specialized controls designed for use with radiant panel heating.

Among the types of heating described are : (1) forced and gravity warm air; forced and gravity hot water; (2) one-and two-pipe steam; (3) radiant floor and ceiling panels; (4) solar heating and (5) the revolutionary heat pump which can be used for heating and for summer air conditioning.

Another section of the book is devoted to warm-air registers and steam and hot-water radiators, to help the home builder select the heating outlets which best conform with his interior decorating plans.

Fill Insulation Cuts Ceiling Temperature

HOW the interior of the home can be made cooler than outside air even on hottest summer days is the timely pointer given by the Construction Research Bureau, New York clearing house for building information, after studying experiments conducted by the National Bureau of Standards.

Roof temperatures often reach 140 to 150 degrees, vast amounts of this superheat penetrating to the living quarters, and the summer-long Bureau of Standards tests were designed to determine how this could be avoided.

On an August afternoon when outside air temperature was 93 degrees, the under side of the roof tested by the bureau was 138 degrees; air in the attic was 130. Almost half of this superheated air penetrated the uninsulated ceiling into the room below and thermometers there showed 106 degrees, or 13 degrees hotter than outside air.

One part of the ceiling was insulated with full-thick batts of mineral wool and one portion had no insulation. Ceiling temperature where there was no insulation was 106.2 degrees, but the ceiling beneath the mineral wool was only 90.8 degrees, or more than 2 degrees cooler than outside air.

The bureau reached these conclusions: "A lath-and-plaster or equivalent ceiling exposed directly to heat of the attic will be so hot on warm summer days as to add materially to the discomfort of persons in the room below. Blanket or loose fill insulation put on top of the ceiling will greatly improve conditions."

SUCCESSFUL SALES PROGRAM: The first group of 60 homes erected by Aldon Properties in its Ayrlawn project at Bethesda, Md., was sold before completion. Another group of 20 will be placed on the market soon. The 1½ story brick homes have two bedrooms, with room for two more in the expansible attic. Latter has plumbing, heating and lighting facilities roughed in for completion into a four-bedroom, two-bath home. Lots average 60 by 120. The firm has 91 acres on which it plans to erect 200 homes

Cozy Candlelight May Mean Call By Fire Laddies

CANDLES give a lovely glow but don't take them up into the attic or into a closet to light your way. For this purpose a flashlight is not only more efficient but much safer. Keep lighted candles away from curtains or flimsy materials and out of sudden gusts of air. Candlesticks should have a wide base, and the candles should be selected with care so that they fit firmly into the holder. A wobbly or topheavy candle is a real menace.

As an added precaution, hold the base of the candle over heat until it begins to melt, then press it firmly into the candlestick. Or better still, fit rubber collars (from the dime store) around the bases. Hurricane candle lamps are very much the fashion, and are much safer than naked candles. Extinguish a candle before it burns down into the socket of the candlestick. Never use a candlestick made of combustible material such as celluloid.

Lampshades are often made of material which ignites if overheated, therefore examine your lamps to be sure there is a generous space between the shade and the bulb. Shades on candles are a definite invitation to fire. Be sure lamp bulbs are perfectly dry after cleaning before you replace them in their sockets.

Cooler Pillows

Terry cloth is now being used for pillow cases. Because this material absorbs moisture, it is claimed to be an aid to cooler sleeping. Or use it as a carry-all for beach trips. The price is $1.95 at Allergy-Free Products, 224 Lexington st., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Placing Pipes Important

NO. 1 on the home builder's hit parade is the ranch type one-story or one-and-a-half story basementless house, according to architects and plan services.

Since this type of house is spread out and covers a large ground area, careful planning of the bathrooms and the piping is necessary for economy. This advance planning should be done with the help of a plumbing contractor before the plans for the house are drawn.

If the house has a floor plan with the bedrooms located in one wing and the kitchen and utility room at the other extreme, one or more bathrooms will be required for the sleeping area with a powder room or half bath to serve the kitchen or utility room.

If the bedrooms are to be served by two bathrooms, these may be arranged back to back for piping economy. Similarly it may be practical to back the powder room against the kitchen or utility room for further economy so that the two groupings of fixtures will each be served by one soil stack.

In a house which covers a large ground area, it is often a problem to know where to locate the water heater since installation near the kitchen or utility room frequently involves a long pipe run to the bathroom at the other end of the house. It may be better in many cases to have two water heaters.

Treasures in Your Attic

By Vivian Brown
Associated Press Newsfeatures Writer

MR. JUNKMAN, beware. Mrs. Housewife is on a rampage again. She's been up in the attic, down in the cellar and out in the woodshed behind the barn, retrieving furniture. There isn't a footstool or kitchen table she hasn't salvaged.

What does she do with the junkman's loot? She scrubs, paints, polishes and shines it until it gleams with new-found charm, and often with new-found service.

Her raw material might be a laundry boiler, an old buffet, trays, picture frames, coffee pot, headboards, bureaus and old garden furniture. From these she makes anything from a bathinette to a lamp.

Many of these reconverted furnishings are decorated with folk-art suggested by Peter Hunt. Mr. Hunt has written several books on the subject, and booklets which are available in paint stores. He believes his simple decorations can be done by anyone. His booklets illustrate step-by-step methods that are a cinch for the most unartistic housewife.

Mr. Hunt's designs are best painted on flat, low-gloss surfaces than on smoth high-gloss enamel. For those that want a real furniture beauty treatment, pieces then are antiqued. This is done by combining turpentine and raw turkey umber oil color and a few other things which make a glaze that is coated over pieces which already have been painted and decorated.

As any one knows who has tried Mr. Hunt's "transformagic," when the glaze is wiped away with a lint-free cloth and a clean dry brush, the effect is beautiful and unusual.

This technique can be used on anything in the house. It can turn an old jug or a coffee pot or a cookie jar into an attractive base for a lamp. An old lard or scrub bucket can see duty as a waste paper basket or magazine holder. Even that old rusty frying pan can become an attractive utensil for serving hors d'oeuvres to the bridge club.

Remove the legs from that old radio cabinet, give it the Hunt treatment and use it as a storage chest. Take an old buffet, remove the legs, set an old battered wardrobe above it and you have an attractive wardrobe for storing baby's or dad's clothes.

Mr. Hunt's designs are simple and easy to do. They range from hearts and strawberries to angels and peasant girls—designs to please every member of the family.

Escaping Gas Odor Is Alarm Signal

ACT the moment you smell escaping gas, because your nose soon becomes insensitive to this odor. Unless the source is obvious—an open jet on the range, for example—don't attempt to locate it yourself. Telephone the gas company at once.

Is it really necessary to say "never look for a leak with a lighted match or candle"? Even a flashlight is not absolutely safe, for under certain circumstances, flashlight batteries can set off an explosion.

Local plumbers may not be competent gas fitters. Have any gas piping installation done by experts. If you are in doubt about the present installation, have it inspected by a trained employe of the gas company.

Clothes Hanger For Travelers

Autovalet is the appropriate name of the latest clothes hanger for the automobile traveler. An adjustable bar of stainless steel fits between the top and bottom frames of the car window without hindering opening or closing. Rubber cushions protect the paint job. Four hooks accommodate about eight garments, letting them hang free. The price of $1.50 will more than cover what it will save in cleaning bills.

Restaurant Planned

Plans for a one-story restaurant at Henry and Oronoco sts., Alexandria, were revealed this week when the owner, Philip Dicken & Son, applied for a building permit.

Folding Scale For Bathroom

Folding scale for the bathroom is a new device made by the Detecto Scale people. No more squinting or stooping to read the weight registered. A tower standing behind the foot brings the dial 10 inches closer to the eyes. When not in use, it folds down flat on the scale. The scale is sold at $12.95 in a choice of seven colors.

Foliage in Rooms Gives Nice Touch

To bring a garden feeling into the house, fill handmade glass bowls and serving dishes with fresh glossy green leaves. The translucence of the containers and the simple patterns of the foliage can be used freely everywhere because they are less distracting than heavier arrangements of flowers.

On a table before sun-flooded windows, try placing a large bowl, in the clean simple lines designed by American craftsmen, filled with rhodendendron leaves. Sunlight filtering through the glass and water, gives a cool and woodsy feeling. Change the water in the bowls frequently.

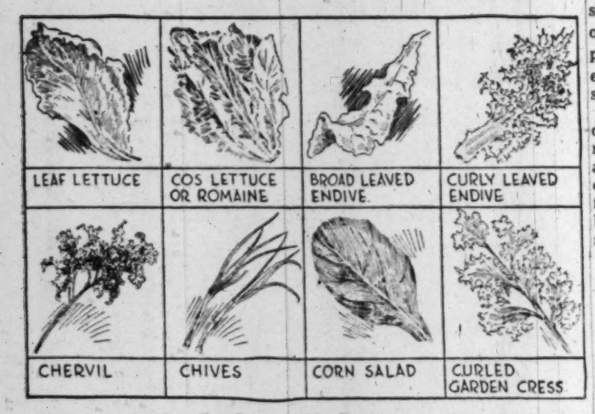
Still Time to Grow Herbs for Seasoning



By James H. Beattie

THE flavor of most of our best foods may be improved through the use of herb and vegetable seasonings grown in the home yard or garden. Some serve the double purpose of a vegetable and a savory seasoning of meats and stews.

There is still time to grow some of the better ones. The harvest season of several of the finest of these plants is ahead and others may be planted for late summer and autumn use.

Few home gardeners will find it necessary to devote much space to the true herbs, grown for seasoning alone. Usually a corner of the garden with a few square feet of space devoted to each of a selected list of herbs will be sufficient.

Several of the herbs are started each season from seed. Anise, basil, celery and celeriac, chervil, coriander, dill, parsley and summer savory are the better-known ones of this group. Anise, celery, celeriac, dill and parsley are probably of most interest to the average gardener.

Anise is best known because of the extensive use of the seeds in bakers' goods and in salads. Seeds can be sowed in the garden during early spring. The rows should be 2 to 3 feet apart with the plants spaced 3 to 4 inches apart. Ordinary cultivation is sufficient. When the seed-heads turn brown in autumn the tops of the plants should be harvested and hung in a shaded place to dry. After thoroughly dry the seed may be stored.

CELERY is adaptable for use as a salad, as an ingredient of soups and stews. The dried seed is extensively used as a flavoring. Celery is a fairly difficult vegetable to grow and it is not adapted to culture in many gardens. The first requirement is for strong, sturdy plants and from 10 to 12 weeks are required to produce them.

In the Washington area celery is usually set in the garden about July 1, hence the growing of the plants must be started about the first of April in the greenhouse or the hotbed. Celery may also be grown as a spring crop and this requires the starting of the plants in midwinter.

Rich soil and plenty of moisture accompanied by exacting cultural care are essential factors in the successful growing of celery. Celery may be stored either by banking it in the row where grown or by lifting and storing on the earth floor of a cool basement or in an unused hotbed. Plants stored in a hotbed or a cold frame may be left to form seed the following season.

CELERIAC, or so-called turnip-rooted celery, is grown in exactly the same manner as celery and the roots may be used alone or in combination with other vegetables as a stew. It is easily stored by burying the root portion of the plants in damp earth on the basement floor.

Once established, DILL will practically take care of itself provided a few plants are allowed to form seed each autumn. The plant is easily started by sowing seeds in the garden rows during early spring. Dill grows to a height of three or four feet. The plants form seed heads which should be harvested before the seeds turn brown. The whole plant is aromatic and the leaves may be used at any time for the flavoring of fried meats and fish, in creamed or fricasseed chicken and otherwise. The fruiting umbels are used for the preparation of dill pickles.

Festive 'Mums' Are Long-Blooming

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

TIME was when we were content with a few indifferent chrysanthemums and some roses which bloomed in the fall in spite of midsummer neglect. But now, with out-of-doors living becoming more popular, the late garden must be every bit as beautiful as that of spring and summer.

Known in America since colonial days and in their native Orient for more than three centuries, chrysanthemums have always been one of the best loved flowers. They are flowers of happy associations, football games and other festive occasions of the fall season.

We have grown to accept them as standbys of the after-summer garden where their warm tones blend with the bright coloring of autumn foliage and their scent is the perfect accompaniment for the odor of burning leaves and the warm earthy scents of Indian summer.

The first chrysanthemums were found high in the mountains of China. They had small, insignificant white blossoms. Chinese horticulturists made some improvements on them and they were used as decoration on early pieces of Chinese porcelain.

Confucius commented on their beauty and many Chinese documents tell of their culture. The Japanese stepped in and took them in hand—made some improvements and claimed them as their national flower.

Many Improvements

WHATEVER their origin or the route by which they have come to us, chrysanthemums are a "must" for every garden. To a vast variety in size and color and type of bloom has been added the length of season which now insures chrysanthemums from summer until the garden is put to bed in the late fall.

Many improvements have been made in the last few years and an interest in chrysanthemum culture has grown by leaps and bounds. They can be counted on to take over the burden of garden decoration for several months and a wide bed of many varieties makes a dazzling showing. To anyone who has seen the chrysanthemums in bloom in Dumbarton Oaks, the display is unforgettable.

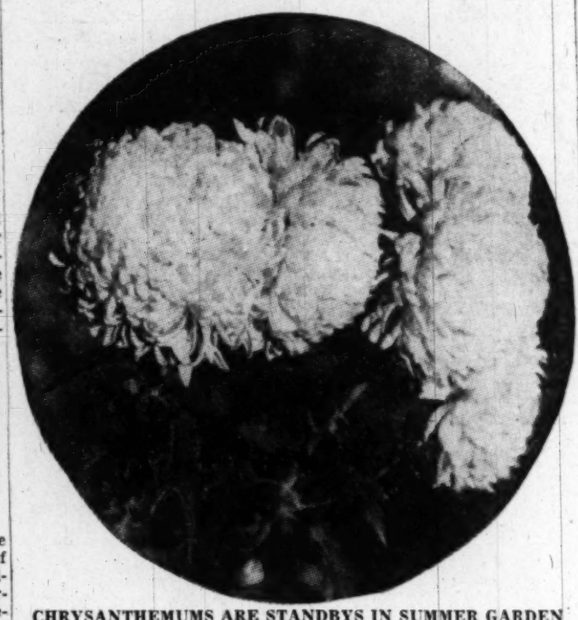
Spring is the best time for transplanting chrysanthemums but it is possible to transplant now if enough earth is lifted. Many nurseries can supply clumps which can be reset now. In small gardens it is almost impossible to have a concentrated planting and they must be put in the perennial border or flower beds. They are lovely with the late fall asters and zinnias. Where it is possible a close planting of chrysanthemums of several varieties is very striking, for one can plan for unusual combinations of both color contrast and color blending.

Time of Blooming

A PERENNIAL garden should include as many varieties of a plant as possible. Color, size and type all enter into it, but it is particularly necessary to consider the time of blooming.

Shasta daisies are the earliest. These, the chrysanthemum maximum, start with old favorite Glory of the Wayside which blooms in May. It continues through the season with some amazingly beautiful varieties, both singles and doubles—the lovely Esther Reed, Admiral Byrd, Chiffon and Marconi, all lovely white and a close cousin of Clara Curtis, a pink which blooms in August.

Catalogs are generous with their pictures and descriptions and nurserymen carry many varieties and can give valuable suggestions on those to be selected to give a full season of bloom.



CHRYSANTHEMUMS ARE STANDBYS IN SUMMER GARDEN

. . . there's still time to transplant them

The introduction of the Koreans did much to increase interest in chrysanthemum growing, for their early blooming habit assured the gardener of chrysanthemums before frost. The Koreans are brilliant and lovely and such generous bloomers that a few plants will supply the house and the garden with brilliant masses of color.

The more recent September Jewels have been well received. They are quite similar to the Clara Curtis, one of their parents, but have a color range of creams, yellows and bronzes. Planted in early spring, they will give bloom aplenty the same season.

Hardy Varieties

GROWERS have been particularly interested in producing and importing varieties able to stand the cold of our northern States. The first of these was Astrid, a shell pink single, 3 or more inches in diameter, with a yellow center. Astrid has been followed by others whose names would indicate that they came from the lands of ice and snow. There is Siegfried, a yellow Viking, burnt orange and Kristina, a rose pink.

To keep plants from becoming too "leggy" and to have a maximum of bloom it is well to pinch or trim back the fall blooming chrysanthemums in July and again in August. In midsummer give them a mulch of hay and then they can be left until just before blooming time when they should be cultivated and fertilized.

Disbudding of the exhibition types is a matter of individual choice. Disbudding insures fewer and larger blooms but many gardeners prefer the clusters of smaller blooms. For exhibition purposes the larger blooms are, of course, a necessity. Good drainage is necessary, all chrysanthemums are heavy feeders and must have plenty of fertilizer. Bonemeal is advised for the fall; superphosphate for spring, well worked in to a depth of from 12 to 16 inches. During the growing season a fertilizer such as 5-10-5 or some of the commercial general fertilizers is good but should be given in small qualities.

Thinning Is a Painful Job, But It Pays

WHEN a beginner in gardening has sown seed, and rejoiced in the quick appearance of numerous sturdy seedlings, his very pride in accomplishment may cause a failure of his crop.

With rare exceptions, he has started too many seedlings for the space available to them. Some of them must be sacrificed, so the others may thrive. The thought of destroying the plants he is so proud of is naturally unpleasant.

Too often this task is shirked, and the plants engage in a struggle for existence which prevents the normal maturity of any.

There is no satisfactory way to avoid thinning. It can be reduced by sowing thinly, but the hazard of seed germination are so great that allowance must be made for the failure of some, by sowing two or three times as many seeds as there is room to mature.

When too many come up, be thankful, and consider the thinning out as an opportunity to select the best plants as the ones to survive.

For best results, thinning should be done gradually. In case of a crop which grows best when the plants stand four inches apart, do not at first thin it to one plant for each four inches. There are two reasons for this.

Take out excess plants gradually, use for table

First, many vegetables, such as carrots and beets, are most delicious when half-mature. By thinning at first only enough to insure that each stands well alone in the row and then allowing them to grow awhile, many will soon reach the stage when they can be harvested for the table.

Second, it is foolish to discard all excess plants prematurely when accidents, insects or disease may destroy many which are left. If thinning is done by stages as the plants grow, they will finally stand at the optimum distance from each other, and there will be small chance of vacant spaces in the row.

Lettuce plants, thinned to stand an inch apart, will soon reach a size when alternate plants can be removed to make a salad; and this process may be continued until the spacing is right for the remaining plants to mature.

Carrots may be thinned the first time when they are as thick as a pencil; and a dish of the thinnings will give those who have never eaten such tiny carrots before, a new idea of this vegetable.

Beets may be allowed to grow until about 6 inches tall, when their roots have just begun to swell. If thinned out at this stage, the thinnings should be cooked roots and tops together, for a delicious dish.

Brushes Made of Reeds

The introduction of liquid paints in ancient Egypt brought the need for brushes. In the British Museum today there are specimens of tools used by the Egyptian craftsmen, including three brushes which seem to have been made of reeds or the fibrous stems of palm leaves.

Rotenone Routs the Insects, Leaves No Harmful Residue

ALTHOUGH practically unknown to United States farmers 20 years ago, rotenone is now among the most widely used insecticides of plant origin. It is ideal for use on crop plants because it leaves no harmful residue. It will control many of the leaf-chewing beetles and caterpillars, the Mexican bean beetle, bean leaf beetles, flea beetles on tomatoes, radishes, carrots, beets and plants grown for greens, and will help check the Japanese beetle.

It will also control caterpillars on cabbage, broccoli, cauliflower and lettuce, aphids on turnips, striped and spotted cucumber beetles on melon and squash, European corn borer on sweet corn, melonworms and pickleworms on squash, cantaloupes and cucumbers.

According to entomologists of the United States Department of Agriculture, gardeners who use rotenone once a week, or as close to that schedule as weather permits, will be well on the way toward satisfactory control of insects.

The insecticide should be applied carefully to both upper and lower surfaces of the plants, the dust or spray reaching under sides of leaves as well as top sides. Success depends upon the regularity and thoroughness of the applications.

Another very important use for rotenone is in combating certain animal parasites. It is the only practical control for the cattle grub, and is very effective against fleas and lice on animals.

Max Sheriger, Bethesda, Md., dusts his young bean plants with rotenone to kill the destructive Mexican bean beetle. This special duster shoots the dust down close to the ground and under the leaves, where spiny yellow grubs feed

Garden Notes

A TRIP to the famous duPont Longwood Gardens at Kennett Square, Pa., has been arranged by the Potomac Rose Society for July 9.

The group, which will leave on buses from 1315 New York ave. nw., at 7 a. m., also will visit the Star Rose Gardens at West Grove, Pa. Information on arrangements may be obtained from Hazen C. Terry, SLigo 1881; C. C. Montgomery, EM. 9060, or L. V. Perry, GL. 4661.

The duPont gardens have the largest greenhouse in the world, it is said, covering 3½ acres under glass, the exhibits including orchids and other tropical plants and espaliers.

Dahlias of the Unwin strain can be grown from seed as easily as zinnias. They will bear double flowers in abundance and form tubers which can be saved over winter and planted again the following spring.

TODAY is the last Sunday to visit the Gardens and the Collection at Dumbarton Oaks, until they reopen in September.

Heating Plants Have Gone Modern

NINETY degree weather might not seem the most pleasant condition under which to think about the problems of heating the house next winter, but actually there's no better time to make arrangements. Remember the moral about "buying straw hats in the winter time."

Steady progress has been made in the improvement of all types of central heating equipment in recent years. One notable trend has been in the direction of compactness.

Pump Does Work

PARTICULARLY noteworthy has been the progress made in the development of small, compact and highly efficient automatically fired hot-water heating systems. It is a far cry from the old-style gravity hot-water plant to the modern hot-water heating system in which the circulation of the water is achieved mechanically by means of a small but powerful electric pump instantly responsive to the impulse of a thermostat.

Hot water may be teamed up with pipe coils in the floors, walls or ceilings to provide the unique advantages of panel heating. The entire wall, floor or ceiling becomes a source of low-temperature, healthful, radiant heat. Because the heating elements are out of sight, there is no interference with the arrangement of furniture.

A number of manufacturers are now making various types of baseboard heating systems which provide a room-long source of clean, even heat. Baseboard heating systems take the place of conventional wooden baseboards on one or more walls. Baseboard heating may be installed in any existing house or in new construction.

Streamlined Convectors

ALSO AVAILABLE for use with hot-water heating systems are handsome, streamlined convectors and radiators restyled and redesigned for greater beauty and space economy.

Refinements and improvements in stokers, oil burners, gas burners and controls combine to give to hot-water heating systems the unique advantages of automatic firing, precise temperature control, the utmost in fuel economy and the correct ratio of radiant to convected heat.

Versatile Paint

There are three different types of aluminum paint now on the market. One type, aluminum house paint, produces an elastic film that clings to wood, expands and contracts with it. A second type, aluminum metal and masonry paint, is for steelwork, brick and concrete, while aluminum enamel, the third type, is used to decorate interiors and to protect heated surfaces indoors.

Smart planning gives this small house a front porch, rear garden terrace, and a private porch for the multi-use room on the first floor. The latter room is adaptable for guest room use by virtue of a stall shower provided in the powder room. This is plan 3124 by L. A. Rauscher, 144 Himrod st., Brooklyn 21, N. Y. Total square foot area of the first floor is 1,036; second floor 610. There are five entrances to this house—through front door, garage hall, multi-use room, kitchen and dining room.

Here's a Play Pen a Child Can Carry

SOMETHING really new, portable and ingeniously superpractical in children's play pens, promises to make life more pleasant for parents and babies alike this summer. It is Kiddie Korral, made by A. F. Smuckler & Co., 202-208 Tillary st., Brooklyn 1, N. Y.

Kiddie Korral weighs only 11½ pounds—light enough for a small child to carry. It is made made of fishnet, aluminum and canvas. Folded for carrying, Kiddie Korral is only 7 inches in diameter and a yard long.

When you're ready to use the pen, you can assemble its two parts in less than a minute, after you've done it a few times. Opened for use, the Korral measures 41 inches square and 32 inches high. The canvas side panels can be used on any two sides for protection from sun and wind. The sunshade covers half of the top; two can be used to cover the top completely. The carrying handle and straps make a trapeze in the pen.

A waterproof canvas bottom extends part way up the sides to break drafts. Eyelets in each corner permit attachment of a mat under the canvas when the pen is not resting on grass, sand or other soft surface.

The fishnet sides are held by 200-pound-test Sisal cord. Squares of the net are too small for a child to push through his arm or leg. The net itself is too elastic for a child to brace his feet against in an effort to climb out. Toys can't be pushed out of the Kiddie Korral, nor can anything be pulled in.

Kiddie Korral, with carrying handle and straps, costs about $25. Accessories being developed include a carrying case with hand and shoulder straps and room for baby food and diapers, mosquito netting and a collapsible hammock.

'Accordion' Table Has Long Stretch

WORKING on the principle that a little goes a long way, Sweden's famous designer, Karl Bruno Mathsson, has just produced a table which does exactly that.

Ideal for a family living in cramped quarters, or for anyone who doesn't like to walk around a cumbersome piece of furniture whenever he crosses a room, Mathsson's table can be either tucked away in a corner or expanded to cover a normal-size room.

In its compressed form, the table is six inches wide. Expanded it zooms out to seat 12 people. In-between lengths seat three, six or nine guests. The trick is a complicated and attractive series of gates and leaves which can be used in any number of combinations. It is made in teak, oak and birch. The teak model sells for $215, the other models for $198.

Glass Curtains

Fiberglas turns up in the news again in the form of glass curtains. Because of the inorganic content of the fabric, it is water-repellent, fire-resistant, does not wrinkle and does not fade. Curtains of this material wash or dry clean easily and may be hung damp. The fibers do not absorb soil, so cleaning will be infrequent.

Merchants In Sacramento Give Buyers Free Transit

SACRAMENTO, CALIF., June 25 (AP).—Shoppers in California's sunny capital ride buses downtown and back home again for free.

The downtown stores have been doing the paying for a year—and the plan is considered a success. It's one answer to the problem of traffic congestion and resultant bad effects on retail trade in the city center.

Sacramento claims one of the largest per person automobile registrations of any city in the world. That is one reason shoppers are urged to leave their cars at home and take the bus.

More automobiles mean more traffic snarls in the downtown section and fewer places for buyers to park. That means many persons will go into the less crowded suburbs to do their buying.

Centers Grow Apace

THIS city of about 130,000 has a string of busy new shopping centers at its sprawling edges. These have everything from gowns to glue, advertise downtown prices and spread plenty of gravel around outside to provide parking areas. One of these suburban centers opened for business only three years ago and now has 55 stores.

So a year ago some 60 downtown merchants joined to sponsor free bus rides to keep customers coming to the city. In the 12 months they have bought and handed out 424,673 bus tokens, costing 7 cents each. That's $29,727.11 worth.

Here's the way the scheme works:

Milady pays her 7 cents when she boards a bus to go downtown. She asks for a dated ticket. Upon making a purchase of at least one dollar in any participating store, she is given two bus tokens. The only requirement is that she must make the buy between 10 a. m. and 4 p. m.—to encourage her to avoid the morning and evening rush hours when workers need the bus space.

Adds 20,000 Riders

BUS LINE MANAGER A. R. THOMPSON says the plan is moving about 20,000 more passengers a month to the downtown sector.

Sacramento pioneered the free ride plan, but it has been adopted since in other cities, including nearby Stockton and also Spokane, Wash.

Queries for information have come from officials in such other cities as New York, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Salt Lake, Phoenix, Ariz.; Pasadena, Calif.; Davenport, Iowa; Rock Island, Ill., and Flint, Mich.

Jacket Pipes To Keep Their Temper Even

MOISTURE condensation on cold water pipes in summer and slow arrival of hot water at an open faucet in winter can both be cured by proper insulation, it was stated yesterday by Construction Research Bureau, New York.

Condensation results when warm, humid air strikes the cold pipe, causing drops of water to form. It is most frequently observed on exposed pipes in basements in summer, but is even more insidious when it remains undiscovered on hidden pipes. It often becomes quite serious when pipes are hidden beneath floors or in walls, for the water drip will damage plaster.

The cure is to wrap exposed pipes with mineral wool insulation or molded insulating jackets. For pipes in floors, the remedy is to close all openings through which warm house air can reach the piping. Full thick wall insulation will prevent trouble there. Loose, nodulated mineral wool is easily blown into walls and other inaccessible spaces in an existing house and not only reduces condensation on pipes, but provides greater year-around comfort. In new homes, batts or blankets of mineral wool are placed between studs and joists after plumbing is installed, completely enveloping the pipes.

The same insulation that prevents condensation on cold pipes in summer will keep hot water pipes from cooling rapidly in winter and result in a substantial fuel saving for the water heater, the bureau has found. Uninsulated hot water pipes cool when not in use, causing long waits for hot water to flow from the tank to open faucets. Thus the automatic water heater is forced to operate for longer periods.

New Plaster Needs

Unfinished plaster needs a special coating of size or primer-sealer before a paint coating containing oil is applied. Paint of the water-thinned type can be put on without such a preliminary coating.

NEW COMMUNITY RISES: A total of 278 homes have been completed in Glenmont Forest, postwar subdivision near Wheaton, Md., developed by Earl J. Preston. The asbestos shingle homes sell from $9350 to $9850, feature two bedrooms, full basements, on lots 60 by 120. Some have expansion attics. The 83-acre tract, one of the biggest in the Wheaton area, has a sample home furnished by Smith's House of Furniture

Want to Fix Your Rent? Then Buy Home!

THERE is a way to fix your rent at a definite level for a period of 15, 20 or 25 years, suggests Rodney M. Lockwood, president of the National Association of Home Builders. It's by purchasing a house.

The home buyer knows definitely how much he will have to make in monthly payments during the term of the mortgage, points out Lockwood. This cannot be changed in any manner by the firm which holds the mortgage. The buyer is secure in a regular payment plan.

In this day of high income taxes the association head sees further reason for home ownership. Interest on mortgages and money paid for property taxes are deductible from adjusted gross income under the Federal Revenue Act of 1948. In the case of families making about $5000 annual income this saving can amount to more than $10 per month.

"At the same time the purchaser of a new home has greater flexibility," Lockwood says. "If less prosperous times come, the home buyer may refinance and arrange for lower payments. On the other hand, if his income increases and he wishes to make larger payments to defray the mortgage, then this is entirely within his rights."

Gadgets Galore at Broyhill Estate

Mr. and Mrs. Broyhill "like to dance." Here they take a turn about the music room on the third floor to strains elicited by their daughter from a Hammond organ. Many are the parties which will be here. Because of soundde adening insulation, no one below will be disturbed a 14x17-foot entrance and it gives the impression of openness and welcome.

To the hall rear, a graceful winding staircase decorated with fine hand carving rises to the second floor.

Turn right or left from the front hall and Mrs. Broyhill's fine hand in the decorative scheme is apparent. A right turn takes you into the immense 32-by-18-foot living room with its wall-to-wall carpeting (typical of all rooms in the living quarters) and walls painted in what Mrs. Broyhill describes as a "Williamsburg blue, with green added."

Soft Paint Tones

TURN sharp left at the front door and you're in the most intimate room in the house—the library. Here, the feminine hand behind the decorators (the Questers, Georgetown) picked what she calls a "mauve and tan shade" wall paint.

A left turn farther down the entrance hall leads to the dining room, done in Williamsburg blue with a touch of gray. The room has its own fireplace.

The dining room cornice, an elaborately carved fringe near the ceiling, had to be put up in 13 separate operations. Broyhill will tell you, with some pride, that the cornice duplicates that in the Peruvian Embassy.

It is the basement, though, that elicits Broyhill's greatest pride in his home. He'll point to the three separate gas furnaces—each one heats a different part of the house and one or more can be turned off, depending upon which part of the house is in use.

In one part of the basement is a room rigged to take a steam bath unit. Nearby are two maids' rooms with bath fixtures. At the other end of the basement lies an 18 by 32-foot recreation room with fireplace.

Electric Eye Governs

THE doors of the adjacent three-car garage spotlight Broyhill's taste for useful gadgets. When you drive up outside, the doors open with the flick of a button on your auto dashboard. You close them the same way. It saves a lot of pulling and hauling, Broyhill says modestly.

Broy Hill, in fact, abounds in useful gadgetry. There are television antenna outlets in the living room, recreation room, library, master bedroom, second-story "family room," and in the third-story music room. There is the intercom system. There are buzzers in the bedrooms.

There are 10 telephone outlet jacks scattered about the house. You plug your phone in where you want it. The house is equipped for full air-conditioning. When you open a closet door, the light pops on automatically. Even the wall light switches are unique—they're called "mercury switches," and they operate silently.

For a trip to the home's second floor, Broyhill will urge you into the neat family elevator. It's an automatic, push-button job, nicely paneled.

The second floor has five bedrooms, and two of them in a private wing belong to the Broyhill's pretty 19-year-old daughter, Nellrose, who will share the home with her mother and father.

Has Own Guest Room

SHE has her own 12x18 bedroom, and a 9x12 version across a narrow hall for her own guests. The two rooms share a bath.

Across the elevator, and adjoining the master bedroom dressing room is what Mrs. Broyhill calls "the family room" with its own bath. Here, she hopes the family grandchildren can stay on a visit.

Possibly the most striking room in a house of unique ideas is the "music room," which takes up most of the third floor.

It's the party spot. The fine hardwood floor stretches 24x43 feet. The electric Hammond organ at one end gives the room its name.

Broyhill, by his own admission a man of simple tastes, likes to dance. So does his wife, and so do their friends. To keep the thump of feet from disturbing sleepers below, the music room floor is insulated with acoustical tile and Celotex.

"You could dance all night and never be heard below," the builder says.

Parties at Home

THE room expresses a piece of Broyhill's philosophy. He thinks if you give your children "a place of their own to enjoy and to which to invite their friends, they won't want to be away from home."

Mention of the roof of remarkable Broy Hill touches off a standing family joke. The roof originally was designed as just that—a roof. But Broyhill had other ideas.

By a major rejuggling of roof plans (including substitution of double for single chimneys) he had Architect Horace W. Peaslee of Washington install an observation deck along the peak.

On this vantage point, Broyhill can gain complete privacy, a fine glimpse of Washington in the distance, and a satisfying view of the 100 surrounding acres he wants to develop as a new Arlington subdivision—Country Club View.

On these rolling, wooded acres, he plans to build 100 rambler and Colonial style homes. Since the war, M. T. Broyhill & Sons (he has two, both married) have built about 200 private homes yearly.

If the new Broyhill dwelling quarters have their quota of useful gadgets, the kitchen abounds in them.

A Chef's Delight

THE all-electric food center, custom-made for the space, is all stainless steel and built-in cupboards. It has an electric ironer, washing machine, dryer, deep freeze in addition to such conventional items as a stove and refrigerator.

In the adjacent butler's pantry is an electric dishwasher and disposal unit. just off the pantry is a breakfast room 10-by-11 feet.

It goes without saying Broy Hill abounds in efficient, modern plumbing. There are six full baths, four lavatories. The bath in the master bedroom, for example, has both a tub and a glassed-in shower.

Four of the full baths have carrara glass tile from floor to ceiling.

As mistress of this household, Mrs. Broyhill's interests are bound to center on one 9-by-14 foot room on the first floor rear, behind the staircase. It's called the "loggia," but it will be headquarters for her hobby, gardening.

The loggia will be glassed in for winter, screened in summer. To its rear is a tiny flower room with a sink, and from its windows the future Broyhill formal garden will stretch.

Today, the formal garden consists only of a trim lawn and several thousand dollars worth of fine boxwood hedge. But as time passes, the family has promised itself the garden and a swimming pool to go with it.

Actually, the Broyhills won't move into their dream house until about August 1. By that time, the last-minute touches of paint and incidental small jobs will have been finished.

Democratic Debut

BUT already, they've entertained. They had a full scale housewarming recently, inviting everybody from architect to building goods suppliers who had anything to do with the building.

They've entertained the Arlington Optimists several times, given a benefit fashion show, and been host to the Republican Women's Club. And daughter Nellrose, a student at Mount Vernon Junior College, had a number of her friends in for a party.

For the senior Broyhills, their fabulous new home was the product of years of planning, working and dreaming.

When they were married in Hopewell, Va., years ago Broyhill brought his bride to a three-room apartment.

Mrs. Broyhill remembers it pretty well. "I think he promised me a palace some day," she recalled. "He certainly made good."

There's Still Time to Grow Herbs for Seasoning

tive to heat and the plant thrives only during the cooler seasons. It is best adapted here to early spring and autumn culture. Spring planting with very early sowing to avoid hot weather is quite desirable. However, the plant does well in autumn, usually living over winter. It is a biennial and likely to form seed during the early part of the spring.

Parsley seeds are small and delicate and growing parsley requires care and patience. The green leaves are used as a garnishing, as parsley potatoes and otherwise. There is a turnip-rooted type that may be used as a cooked vegetable. The turnip-rooted type may be stored in the same way as other root crops.

Perennial herbs require little care. Several of our best herbs and seasoning plants live year after year without reseeding or resetting.

THE CHIVE is a small, hardy, plant related to the onion. It is easily grown as a border and once established, chive plants will persist. The plant may be easily started in a new location by merely lifting a clump from an established bed and resetting in the new location.

GARLIC is somewhat difficult to grow in this locality, but with rich soil, liberal fertilization and early spring planting, very satisfactory results are often obtained. It may be grown exactly like onion sets. The "cloves" as they are ordinarily received from the seedsman, contain about 10 bulbs. These are to be carefully separated and planted singly. After the tops have died the cloves should be lifted and carefully dried in a cool, well-ventilated place.

SAGE plants may be started from seed, from cuttings, or by using a part of an established clump. It lives from year to year in the same place and the plant will survive with little attention.

THYME is usually propagated from seeds sown indoors during early spring and the plants transplanted when 2 to 3 inches high to the garden rows. Only a few plants are required to supply the needs of the average family. When the plants are in bloom 5 or 6 inches of the tops should be cut, placed on trays and stored in a cool place until dried. The leaves should be stripped from the dried stems and stored in a closed container. The crumbled leaves are used for the seasoning of meats and poultry stuffings.

SPEARMINT and PEPPERMINT are easily grown. The mints are propagated from underground or surface stems and when once started the mint will grow for several years. Spearmint is the one generally used in flavoring iced tea, lemonade, etc.

New Dust for Onion Thrips

ONION THRIPS, which have been known to wipe out entire fields and have heretofore resisted control efforts of entomologists, are being effectively checked by a new synthetic insecticidal combination, according to reports from Southern growers.

In Texas and other nearby onion growing areas, dusts based on DDT and a contact insecticide known as Lethane B-71 developed by the Rohm & Haas Co., are proving highly effective in eliminating the thrips scourge without harm to crop foliage. The Lethane provides fast action and DDT increases the killing power and residual qualities.

This combination has cleaned the onion fields in two carefully timed applications and is considerably less expensive than a straight 10 per cent DDT dust, the manufacturer claims.

Thrips, wintering in the grass and weeds along ditch banks surrounding the onion fields, have made early onion crops difficult. Early onions, grown from "slips," mature quickly and produce the first infestation of juice sucking thrips. When the "slips" are harvested, the thrips move into adjoining fields of seed onions, doubling the damage already done.

Young thrips hide in the heart of the onion where it is almost impossible to reach them with a spray or dust. In the tests in Texas and other Southern States it was found necessary to kill the thrips after they emerged from the heart of the onion and began to feed on the leaves.

It is reported that timing of each application is highly important. Dusting begins early in the season and includes the ditch banks and grain fields bordering the onion fields—since the thrips sometimes feed on weeds and grasses until hotweather forces them into the onion fields—and is followed by a second application one week later.

It is also reported that Lethane B-71 is being effectively used for the control of pea aphids along the eastern shorn of Delaware and Maryland. These dusts use Lethane either as the sole toxic agent or in combination with rotenone or DDT.

Heat Prostration

Danger of heat prostration in the home where one-fourth of all deaths from this cause occur, can be minimized by keeping heat out of the house with insulation and sparing use of heat generating cook stoves, electric lights and appliances.

Danes Thrill to Our Savvy, Mildly Praise 'Hamlet' Cast

By Richard L. Coe
Post Reporter

ELSINORE, DENMARK, June 25.—Tonight the Town Council of Elsinore will be presenting a new medal, awarded for the first time, to Robert Breen, now playing the title role of an American "Hamlet" in the courtyard of ancient Kronborg Castle.

The other afternoon a lively innkeeper of Snekkersten, a village near here, cooked up a wild boar, some pheasant and other titillating bits of chow from an old cookbook dating back, says he, to the time of Amleth, the fellow who inspired Shakespeare's play.

This gives you some idea of the enthusiasm with which the Danes have received this cultural exchange prompted by Blevins Davis' production of "Hamlet." It's the first time the United States has been represented in this unique series of open air "Hamlets," which previously has included such noted acting companies as Laurence Olivier's Old Vic players, John Gielgud's repertory and the national theaters of Germany, Finland and Norway.

Adventure Fascinates Danes

SO AS THE first visit by Americans to what is, to Danes, a historic spot, this "Hamlet" has prompted the widest press attention old Denmark has ever given the series or any other theatrical events. They are, frankly, "fascinated," "interested" "intrigued" by the adventure, but their reaction has hardly been lavish in praise for the acting company.

Since the critical consensus largely agrees with my own, I can understand their reaction completely. In this newspaper-conscious country (there are over 150 daily papers for its four million citizens), 11 lengthy reviews have so far appeared; more will be along in the leisurely manner of this "manana" territory of the north, where the critics are accustomed to let several performances elapse before they even attend a "first night."

The fascination comes from that aspect of America which intrigues all foreigners—our technical "know-how." While this may not come precisely under the heading of the accepted term of "culture," it is surely looked on as part of "American culture" and so it is that stage designer Nat Karson is the first of his craft I've ever known to be a star of "Hamlet."

Karson, once designer for the Radio City Music Hall and known widely for his Broadway sets, had a rare challenge when he saw the courtyard of Kronborg Castle for the first time and he has met it brilliantly. This rock pile is a vast rectangle with six stories of windows looking down on the cobblestoned square. Amleth's old home is right near the sea—across the choppy Sound glitter the lights of Sweden—and somehow the sea breezes blow down into the square box, making it a veritable cave of the winds. It's sacred ground to the Danes, as revered in its historic memories as it is ancient. But it's too cold for the international set to dress in its smart didoes; overcoats and blankets are the rule and a small bottle comes in handy, too. Performances are nightly, but it gets really dark only near the end of the play.

The courtyard is in a combination of primitive and baroque styles and fitting miraculously into the atmosphere, Karson has designed six huge statues of Danish kings and heroes. He's formed a stage of wood and papier mache which looks like the castle walls themselves and I've seen Danes who know the castle well gasp as they come into the play. They also admire his lighting, but again hours of twilight play tricks on that.

Against these colossi, Director Breen has grouped his players, dressed in Renaissance style by Jed Mace, of Dallas, Tex. As the play's adaptor, Breen has worked out a version, totally unfamiliar to tradition, which opens the play with a bright court ball scene, followed by the familiar first scene, the appearance of the ghost on the castle ramparts.

This has astonished the Danes as much as it did me, but one of the leading critics, "Berlingske Tidende's" respected Svend Kragh-Jacobsen, considered it clever and effective.

Reaction Iconoclastic

HOWEVER, this sets the play off on what another reviewer described as a "cocktail party, reminiscent of Technicolored musicals." The remark is apt and sums up what most people felt—that we are expectedly iconoclastic about Shakespeare.

They felt that they saw other Hollywood touches. For instance, Hamlet's pals are a touchy subject with the Danes. Shakespeare didn't think very highly of those fellows, but both names always have been and remain leading families in this lineage-minded land. Mace has dressed them simply, compared with the other courtiers, evidently befitting students, and they carry guns. One reviewer felt this "uniform befitting chauffers" an affront to respected families. Another thought them treated as movie cowboys. A third was reminded of Al Capone's gangsters.

Ruth Ford's Ophelia, too, is hardly the innocent girl of tradition. She's sleek, blonde and sophisticated, again "Technicolored," and she didn't please those who

New Film Firm

IDA LUPINO and Collier Young are forming a new production company and plan to make two pictures this year. One is "Never Fear," a love story about a polio victim. The other is "Deep Is My Well," which is being scripted by Alan Campbell. It's about a couple of Americans, one of whom is suspected of murder, and the film will be shot in Italy. Campbell works at Ida's hilltop home in shorts. He gets paid for getting a suntan.

Errol Flynn flies over from France for two more scenes in "The Forsyte Saga"; then goes back to Europe to complete his vacation. What's a mere matter of 12,000 miles for a love scene with Greer Garson?

The last time Byrnie Foy talked with Hollywood Raffles Eugene Dennis, whose story he'll put on the screen when he moves to Warners July 1, Raffles asked Foy who would play his part on the screen. Byrnie answered, "I have no idea," then the sleight-of-hand gent said, "If you'll put up $100,000 bail for me, I'll play it myself. You could have a couple of fellows watching me" . . . George McManus, famous cartoonist, plays himself in "Jiggs and Maggie Hit the Jackpot." George loves it except for the makeup. Says he, "Imagine trying to improve my mug" . . . Jack Moffitt, the screen writer who hasn't had a movie job since he testified against the Unfriendly Ten, is writing an historic novel. A sort of male "Forever Amber."

Deliver the Goods

MICHAEL POWELL and Emeric Pressburger, producers of "Red Shoes," are here for a short visit. They start "Down to Earth" with Jennifer Jones in London July 11. They had a conference with Jennifer and David Selznick in Zurich last week. Powell and Pressburger are very excited about Jennifer. Michael said, "she's one actress who has humility" . . . I asked whether Moira Shearer, the star of "Red Shoes," would make another film. The producers say she will if the right story comes along. She has integrity and is very consistent. Her career is ballet.

WNBW Reaches 2, And Grows Apace

By Sonia Stein

TOMORROW marks the end of the second year of operation for WNBW, Washington's oldest commercially licensed television station. This station, which has the largest facilities and probably as much dazzle as any in town, was actually preceded in Washington by WTTG, which had been operating on an experimental basis under the call letters W3XWT since May 10, 1945. But the arrival of commercially licensed WNBW, the Nation's first postwar TV station, gave local TV a shot in the arm.

When WNBW began broadcasting on June 27, 1947, there were an estimated 5000 TV receivers in the Washington area. Two years later—during which time WMAL-TV (October 3, 1947) and WOIC (January 16, 1949) have joined WTTG and WNBW—the sets now number more than 50,000 and are expected to increase at a rate between 2000 and 3000 every month.

Government officials and men of importance in radio circles were invited to a sumptuous buffet party following a dedication program that June 27 at the Wardman Park Hotel where the WNBW transmitter and studios are located. But these same gentlemen or a substantially similar group had already given WNBW television a warm welcome the preceding June when the famous Louis-Conn fight was picked up from the NBC coaxial cable and shown on special sets in the Statler Hotel a year before WNBW was actually on the air.

NBC Affiliate

AS AN NBC affiliate, and one which is owned and operated by its network, WNBW has had all the advantages a struggling TV fledgling could ask. Before it had its studio facilities in shape—the Wardman Park Theater, which now serves as studio space, was all a dusty upheaval two years ago—WNBW relied almost entirely on programming from the network. At one point some telecasting was done from the WRC studios on 14th st.

But all of the programs now come from the Wardman Park.

Besides the special events which would normally be expected of a Capital station, WNBW feeds several other shows to the NBC network. Daily a portion of the "Camel News Caravan" is fed from Washington by Robert McCormack. On a weekly basis there are "Meet the Press," the Wednesday night press conference moderated by Martha Rountree; "American Television Forum," the Sunday afternoon forum conducted by Theodore Granick; "The Eyes Have It," a Sunday afternoon quiz show involving visual quiz material and celebrities being baffled by same; "Meet Your Congress," a debate program on Sunday afternoons under the guidance of Blair

The Virginian Likes His Music Good

By Paul Hume

A MILLION-DOLLAR lawsuit is afoot in the concert management business.

It was filed recently by National Concert and Artists Corporation against the publishers of Collier's. The suit charges the weekly magazine with libel as the result of an article purporting to disclose behind-the-scenes facts and figures in the immensely profitable business of presenting music throughout the Nation.

HIDEN

The plaintiff, widely known as NCAC, is one of two large companies in the business of managing artists. Its principal competitor is Columbia Artists Management, which has been quick to advise the weekly magazine that it, too, expects restitution.

Hiden at Helm

LEAVING the whole question of the magazine article and consequent charges, it is interesting to consider a new concert venture which has come through a successful season in several towns in Virginia.

Under the direction, and as the result of, the planning and roadwork of Martin Hiden of the University of Virginia, a series of more than a dozen concerts was given in that school's Cabell Hall. Memberships were sold for the entire series, with almost a thousand subscribers.

Artists were not the big names of the concert field, and their fees were not the $500-$2000 figures which bound the majority of musicians appearing under management before the public today.

Of the programs presented, one was drawn entirely from Mozart, and one from modern composers. Song recitals of the highest musical caliber alternated with chamber concerts where the names of Milhaud, Hindemith, Barber, Bartok, Copland and Charles Ives walked with more familiar names of musical history.

Measuring Up

NO CONCERT was allowed to slip into the old pattern of opening with some formidable opus and then lapsing into groups of sops to public taste—so-called. Actually it was proved that public taste, even in com-

were trying to accept "the new." However, Miss Ford's mad scene did find its analytical admirers.

What They Think They Know

ALL SUCH criticisms are interesting in what they reveal foreigners think they know about us. As anyone who's lived abroad will tell you, non-Americans have definite, preconceived ideas about the United States, just as we do about them, and the instant they find details to substantiate preconceived notions, they're latched onto for good. So much for their recognition of Hollywood, Breen's flowing script technique ("like a Hollywood script, even to flashbacks," remarked one reviewer) and Karson's absolutely stunning set.

Most cogent of them seems to be Politiken's critic (a recent United States visitor), Harald Engberg. He sees in us a people much like the lusty lot of Shakespeare's own day, robust, vigorous, unsophisticated. The Breen version (which got as close to Washington as Arlington Farms and Arlington last winter) he sees as just the sort of version such a people would produce. He obviously gave a lot of thought to his lengthy review and like his fellows philosophized about American culture in general, what we stand for in the world and what our thoughts mean to mankind.

He's No Olivier

WHILE BREEN'S version of the play has prompted varied comment (the commy sheet here, "Land og Folk," had a high old time on that score), his acting, I'm afraid, will have the town councilors of Elsinore biting their tongues when they give him that award tonight. He's not up to the strong lingering shades of Gielgud and Olivier and that's that.

His conception of Hamlet is wild, woolly insanity. You'd think he was playing Mephistopheles in "Faust" instead. His makeup is extreme—pointed eyebrows, sunken cheeks and lacking only horns. He acts the tortured prince as though he were mad as a coot and only shows joy when finally he plunges his dagger into Walter Abel's King Claudius at a time uncomfortably close to train time for Copenhagen, from which come most of each night's 2000 courtyard spectators. All have agreed that technically Breen is not doing as an actor what he seems to demand as a director.

Which leads one to the complex reasons why he happens to be playing Hamlet here in the first place.

Praise for Danes

THIS COMPANY is here because one American—friendly Blevins Davis, of Independence, Mo., and Long Island, N. Y.—had the courage to see to it that the Danish government's invitation to our Government was finally accepted. Davis felt that though this might not be the Hamlet production of his dreams, it was an opportunity America should not miss. It's meant that he had to do somethings he disliked doing, but the essential aim was achieved.

Both Americans and Europeans I've talked with here are emphatic in their praise for Davis. He and his company are well-liked, but more than anything else, they've shown some facets of the American theater about which the European is immensely curious. With the choice he made, I heartily agree and one only hopes it gives heart to other American theater people to try their wings with American casts and technicians abroad. And it further points up our need for a truly national theater.

This need is evident in the playing of the company. It is an unlikely lot of actors, drawn from Broadway, Hollywood and the Barter Theater, performing in an incredible variety of styles and getting precious little of that entity of performing that is the essence of good performances.

MacMahon as Queen

APART FROM Breen's macabre, neurotic prince, you get Aline MacMahon as a placid, matronly queen, obviously thoroughly in the dark about her new husband's intrigues and thoughtful only of her son's loony behavior. You get, and this is the tradition which finds this reporter most at home with "Hamlet," a richly spoken Polonius from Equity President Clarence Derwent, whom the Danes have embraced above most of his fellows because they understand his style. There's walter Abel's mustachioed king, which reminded someone of a railroad fireman, though they did like his large voice. There's the glittering artificiality of Miss Ford," the mimic qualities of the Barter Theater's knowingly modern young players, the is-it-man-woman-or-what quality of Mell Turner's spangled Osric. Yes, there's something of everything in this "Hamlet," put together from the State Theater of Virginia's 200th anniversary production of last summer.

The duel scene though, is a corker, energetically fought by Breen and a blond, giant of a Laertes, Wray Davis. The Danes lapped up the excitement and in the words of "Social Demokraten's" Egbert Ericksen, "This Hamlet visit will be remembered long after others are forgotten."

The Danish critics also have a way you may have noticed with our own reviews back home. After going thoroughly into something, pulling it apart, they say: "But it is interesting and I advise you to see it for yourself."

So the State Theater of Virginia, ANTA's people, Equity's actors, Composer Arthur Kreutz, Designer Karson are very much on the map here at the moment. "What will you send us next?" ask the Danes.

Madison Here Tuesday in 'J. Loves M.'

FILM STAR GUY MADISON will be the guest star of the next attraction at the Olney Theater when Richard Skinner and Evelyn Freyman present Norman Krasna's comedy, "John Loves Mary," for one week beginning Tuesday. Supporting Madison will be Dean Harens and Mary MacArthur of Olney's resident company, both already well known to the theater's audiences. Harry Ellerbe has staged the production, which will have a setting by S. Syrjala and will be shown nightly except Monday at 8:40, with matinees Saturday and Sunday at 2:40.

Guy Madison, although only 26, was an immediate success in his first film role, made while on a furlough from the Navy. It was chance which brought him before the camera for a very short scene in "Since You Went Away," a scene which he played in his regulation sailor's uniform. The public's reaction to this young actor was so great that he was cast to play the lead opposite Dorothy Maguire in "Till the End of Time." His appearance at Olney comes by special arrangement with the Selznick Studio and will be his only personal appearance this summer.

"John Loves Mary" is one of the few successful comedies to come out of the recent war. Set in the living room of an average home, the situations arising from young men on leave and the complications which the Army inflicts on their love lives, provide some of the funniest scenes of recent years. The play ran for almost a year on Broadway and then went on to play many months in Chicago.

Kerr Speaks Tuesday At W. & M. Institute

Walter Kerr, associate professor of playwriting at Catholic University, will keynote the opening of the second annual William and Mary Institute of the Theater on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Six courses in various phases of the theater and speech are offered in the summer school at Williamsburg, while seminars conducted by well-known figures support the program. The drama, "The Common Glory," also is allied with the institute, which is under the direction of Althea Hunt of the William and Mary faculty.

Green Dramas Opening

Paul Green's two big historical dramas are opening in Virginia and North Carolina this week.

"The Common Glory" begins its third season at Matoaka Lake theater in Williamsburg on Friday. And "The Lost Colony" on Saturday goes into its ninth season at the Waterside Theater on Roanoke Island, Manteo, N. C.

Hilltop Theater

The Hilltop Theater, Lutherville, Md., on Tuesday opens Sutton Vane's "Outward Bound" for a run through Sunday. Curtain time is 8:45 p. m.

The Hilltop is at Emerson Farms, Fall and Valley roads, Greenspring Valley, north of Baltimore. For information call Towson 2404.

Mountain Theater

The Mountain Theater, Braddock Heights, Md., on Wednesday night opens a four-day run of "January Thaw." The theater is on Route 40, 5 miles west of Frederick, Md.

Farce Repeating At Cross Roads

F. Hugh Herbert's comedy, "For Love or Money," will undertake a second four-day run beginning Wednesday evening at the Cross Roads Theater, Bailey's Crossroads, Va. The play may be seen Wednesday through Saturday.

Curtain time is 8:45. Call Glebe 8683 for reservations.

Irma Gorden is again producer at Cross Roads. Cecil Willis is the director, and Lowell Swortzell is stage manager.

"The Master Builder" To Open at Barter

Having concluded short runs of "Jenny Kissed Me" and "Angel Street," the Barter Theater Players of Abingdon, Va., tomorrow night will open a three-night stand of Ibsen's "The Master Builder."

The players will present a second three-night run of "Jenny Kissed Me," starting Thursday night, and will open with "For Love or Money" on July 4.

Hartmans for Olney

Richard Skinner and Evelyn Freyman have signed Grace and Paul Hartman to appear at their Olney (Md.) Theater in a new revue, "Up to Now," the week of July 19. This revue is being tryed out on the summer circuit, with a Broadway production in the fall envisioned.

American Troupe Wins Warm Danish Greeting

were trying to accept "the new." However, Miss Ford's mad scene did find its analytical admirers.

What They Think They Know

ALL SUCH criticisms are interesting in what they reveal foreigners think they know about us. As anyone who's lived abroad will tell you, non-Americans have definite, preconceived ideas about the United States, just as we do about them, and the instant they find details to substantiate preconceived notions, they're latched onto for good. So much for their recognition of Hollywood, Breen's flowing script technique ("like a Hollywood script, even to flashbacks," remarked one reviewer) and Karson's absolutely stunning set.

Most cogent of them seems to be Politiken's critic (a recent United States visitor), Harald Engberg. He sees in us a people much like the lusty lot of Shakespeare's own day, robust, vigorous, unsophisticated. The Breen version (which got as close to Washington as Arlington Farms and Arlington last winter) he sees as just the sort of version such a people would produce. He obviously gave a lot of thought to his lengthy review and like his fellows philosophized about American culture in general, what we stand for in the world and what our thoughts mean to mankind.

He's No Olivier

WHILE BREEN'S version of the play has prompted varied comment (the commy sheet here, "Land og Folk," had a high old time on that score), his acting, I'm afraid, will have the town councilors of Elsinore biting their tongues when they give him that award tonight. He's not up to the strong lingering shades of Gielgud and Olivier and that's that.

His conception of Hamlet is wild, woolly insanity. You'd think he was playing Mephistopheles in "Faust" instead. His makeup is extreme—pointed eyebrows, sunken cheeks and lacking only horns. He acts the tortured prince as though he were mad as a coot and only shows joy when finally he plunges his dagger into Walter Abel's King Claudius at a time uncomfortably close to train time for Copenhagen, from which come most of each night's 2000 courtyard spectators. All have agreed that technically Breen is not doing as an actor what he seems to demand as a director.

Which leads one to the complex reasons why he happens to be playing Hamlet here in the first place.

Praise for Danes

THIS COMPANY is here because one American—friendly Blevins Davis, of Independence, Mo., and Long Island, N. Y.—had the courage to see to it that the Danish government's invitation to our Government was finally accepted. Davis felt that though this might not be the Hamlet production of his dreams, it was an opportunity America should not miss. It's meant that he had to do somethings he disliked doing, but the essential aim was achieved.

Both Americans and Europeans I've talked with here are emphatic in their praise for Davis. He and his company are well-liked, but more than anything else, they've shown some facets of the American theater about which the European is immensely curious. With the choice he made, I heartily agree and one only hopes it gives heart to other American theater people to try their wings with American casts and technicians abroad. And it further points up our need for a truly national theater.

This need is evident in the playing of the company. It is an unlikely lot of actors, drawn from Broadway, Hollywood and the Barter Theater, performing in an incredible variety of styles and getting precious little of that entity of performing that is the essence of good performances.

MacMahon as Queen

APART FROM Breen's macabre, neurotic prince, you get Aline MacMahon as a placid, matronly queen, obviously thoroughly in the dark about her new husband's intrigues and thoughtful only of her son's loony behavior. You get, and this is the tradition which finds this reporter most at home with "Hamlet," a richly spoken Polonius from Equity President Clarence Derwent, whom the Danes have embraced above most of his fellows because they understand his style. There's walter Abel's mustachioed king, which reminded someone of a railroad fireman, though they did like his large voice. There's the glittering artificiality of Miss Ford, the mimic qualities of the Barter Theater's knowingly modern young players, the is-it-man-woman-or-what quality of Mell Turner's spangled Osric. Yes, there's something of everything in this "Hamlet," put together from the State Theater of Virginia's 200th anniversary production of last summer.

The duel scene though, is a corker, energetically fought by Breen and a blond, giant of a Laertes, Wray Davis. The Danes lapped up the excitement and in the words of "Social Demokraten's" Egbert Ericksen, "This Hamlet visit will be remembered long after others are forgotten."

The Danish critics also have a way you may have noticed with our own reviews back home. After going thoroughly into something, pulling it apart, they say: "But it is interesting and I advise you to see it for yourself."

So the State Theater of Virginia, ANTA's people, Equity's actors, Composer Arthur Kreutz, Designer Karson are very much on the map here at the moment. "What will you send us next?" ask the Danes.

Madison Here Tuesday in 'J. Loves M.'

FILM STAR GUY MADISON will be the guest star of the next attraction at the Olney Theater when Richard Skinner and Evelyn Freyman present Norman Krasna's comedy, "John Loves Mary," for one week beginning Tuesday. Supporting Madison will be Dean Harens and Mary MacArthur of Olney's resident company, both already well known to the theater's audiences. Harry Ellerbe has staged the production, which will have a setting by S. Syrjala and will be shown nightly except Monday at 8:40, with matinees Saturday and Sunday at 2:40.

Guy Madison, although only 26, was an immediate success in his first film role, made while on a furlough from the Navy. It was chance which brought him before the camera for a very short scene in "Since You Went Away," a scene which he played in his regulation sailor's uniform. The public's reaction to this young actor was so great that he was cast to play the lead opposite Dorothy Maguire in "Till the End of Time." His appearance at Olney comes by special arrangement with the Selznick Studio and will be his only personal appearance this summer.

"John Loves Mary" is one of the few successful comedies to come out of the recent war. Set in the living room of an average home, the situations arising from young men on leave and the complications which the Army inflicts on their love lives, provide some of the funniest scenes of recent years. The play ran for almost a year on Broadway and then went on to play many months in Chicago.

Kerr Speaks Tuesday At W. & M. Institute

Walter Kerr, associate professor of playwriting at Catholic University, will keynote the opening of the second annual William and Mary Institute of the Theater on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Six courses in various phases of the theater and speech are offered in the summer school at Williamsburg, while seminars conducted by well-known figures support the program. The drama, "The Common Glory," also is allied with the institute, which is under the direction of Althea Hunt of the William and Mary faculty.

Green Dramas Opening

Paul Green's two big historical dramas are opening in Virginia and North Carolina this week.

"The Common Glory" begins its third season at Matoaka Lake theater in Williamsburg on Friday. And "The Lost Colony" on Saturday goes into its ninth season at the Waterside Theater on Roanoke Island, Manteo, N. C.

Hilltop Theater

The Hilltop Theater, Lutherville, Md., on Tuesday opens Sutton Vane's "Outward Bound" for a run through Sunday. Curtain time is 8:45 p. m.

The Hilltop is at Emerson Farms, Fall and Valley roads, Greenspring Valley, north of Baltimore. For information call Towson 2404.

Mountain Theater

The Mountain Theater, Braddock Heights, Md., on Wednesday night opens a four-day run of "January Thaw." The theater is on Route 40, 5 miles west of Frederick, Md.

Jimmy Dickens . . . in "Kapital Korncert" Wednesday at the National Airport Terrace Room

Farce Repeating At Cross Roads

F. Hugh Herbert's comedy, "For Love or Money," will undertake a second four-day run beginning Wednesday evening at the Cross Roads Theater, Bailey's Crossroads, Va. The play may be seen Wednesday through Saturday.

Curtain time is 8:45. Call Glebe 8683 for reservations.

Irma Gorden is again producer at Cross Roads. Cecil Willis is the director, and Lowell Swortzell is stage manager.

"The Master Builder" To Open at Barter

Having concluded short runs of "Jenny Kissed Me" and "Angel Street," the Barter Theater Players of Abingdon, Va., tomorrow night will open a three-night stand of Ibsen's "The Master Builder."

The players will present a second three-night run of "Jenny Kissed Me," starting Thursday night, and will open with "For Love or Money" on July 4.

Hartmans for Olney

Richard Skinner and Evelyn Freyman have signed Grace and Paul Hartman to appear at their Olney (Md.) Theater in a new revue, "Up to Now," the week of July 19. This revue is being tryed out on the summer circuit, with a Broadway production in the fall envisioned.

Virginia Welcomes Longhair Music

munities relatively unacquainted with live music, was perfectly able to cope with all that came its way.

More than that, discussions started after a concert of contemporary music aroused community comment in a rural center, every tenth member of which was a subscriber to the program! The larger concert managements which sell series of artists to communities throughout the country insist that their artists play or sing something "everyone knows."

They told one of their most brilliant pianists last season that he could not play the program he had in mind, consisting of three piano sonatas and a Chopin scherzo. Such a program, according to the big shots in New York, would not go in Daisy Center, or Birdbrain Flats.

Well, such programs succeeded in rural towns with a population of about 600, and they are spreading by request of other communities, to cities and towns outside Virginia.

Fine Support

HIDEN has won the support of the Coolidge Foundation and of the Juilliard School of Music. Next season, still charging no more than the cost of a movie per concert, he will bring his growing circuit Alexander Schneider and Ralph Kirkpatrick, playing Bach and Mozart on violin and harpsichord, and the Albeneri Trio in the world's finest chamber music for piano, violin and cello.

Margaret Tolson, widely acclaimed for her program of American music in the National Gallery this spring, will play one of her superb recitals. John Jacob Niles, America's leading folk singer, will tour the territory. And there will be the same kind of top-notch programming on which the series made its initial fine impression.

Public comment, newspaper editorials and professional criticism has acclaimed these concerts. The artists have spoken of the great pleasure they feel in playing to such appreciative audiences. And they especially like the fact that they never feel they are playing or singing down to an audience.

Vitally Interested

THE success of the Virginia concerts shows that people are vitally interested in hearing new music, well presented, without benefit of the big names doing most of the business. These concerts will undoubtedly spread through this region and may grow beyond any one person's dreams. This must happen without deterioration in the caliber of either programs or artists.

Such concerts are ideal not only in small towns and cities, but in the outer sections of cities. For instance, Washington's Georgetown, Chevy Chase and Arlington areas are being eyed with interest by those interested in finer concerts for more listeners. We may be entering an era where we can go to a concert and not have to listen to the same music over and over again.

The Washington Philatelist

Presidential Stamp Issue To Go On Sale July 1

By William M. Stuart

PLANS are being perfected in the Postoffice Department for again placing on sale at the Philatelic Agency the presidential issue of postage stamps. The date of sale will be July 1.

STUART

For a long period collectors have been patiently awaiting the time when they again might purchase these popular stamps.

It may be rather difficult to replenish all plate numbers immediately, but collectors are assured that the stock of stamps, from the lowest to the highest values—the $5 denomination—is in sufficient quantity to eventually supply every one.

Undoubtedly there will now be a breathing spell in the issue of new stamps, for the Postoffice Department is working under a new agreement with Congress made a few weeks ago. The Agency maintains a full list of commemoratives, air mails and a few special varieties, hence with the current issue restored the need of every collector should be satisfactorily filled. As these stamps are restored to the list it might be well to remind collectors to file orders as soon as possible. Sales will be heavy but speedy handling is anticipated.

THE Postoffice Department has approved special cancellations on covers as follows: Vassar, Mich., "Centennial 1849 Cork Pine City"; and Punxsutawney, Pa., "Punxsutawney, Pa., Centennial 1849-1949."

Senator Hoey (D., N. C.), has introduced a bill for a special stamp commemorating the sesquicentennial of the discovery of gold in Cabarrus County, North Carolina.

Postmaster William A. Strohm of Annapolis, Md., announces that the cancellation die used for the Tercentenary of Annapolis would be used again from now until December 31. The slogan used reads: "Tercentenary, Annapolis, Maryland, 1649-1949."

THE Dominican Republic has issued a series of six stamps depicting the ruins of the Church of St. Francis, Ciudad Trujillo. The four higher values are for air mail and the two lower postage issues. The design is the same on each stamp but the air mails picture a plane flying above the ruins. The 1 and 3-centavo and the air mails are 7, 10, 15 and 20 centavo. The issues are from 300,000 to two million. The republic has issued an unusual postal card. Imprinted on a set of three picture cards is a new stamp design showing the Hotel Jaragua in Ciudad Trujillo. The pictures on the reverse side of the card show historic, industrial and scenic scenes. The values are 2 centavos blue, 4-c. red and 9-c. purple, the last value being for international air mail.

There were 390,416 covers canceled first day April 27 of the 3-cent Puerto Rico commemorative stamp at San Juan and 668,000 stamps sold, amounting to $20,040.

The new state of Israel has opened a philatelic section at Room 219, 250 W. 57th st., New York City. The new office is in charge of Dror Gal-Fzer, official of the ministry of transport and communications.

Isobel Baillie Sings Here Next Sunday

NEXT Sunday we'll give you full details on the National Symphony and the Water Gate season opening July 3.

PICKENS

July 3 will see not only the opening of the Water Gate season, but Washington's first concert by Isobel Baillie, English soprano. The great artist, known in this country by record collectors, is one of the finest living mistresses of classic song.

She will sing next Sunday in Washington Cathedral at 5 in the afternoon, accompanied by Paul Callaway. She will also have the brilliant trumpet playing of Lloyd Geisler in Handel's "Let the Bright Seraphim." Plan your day to hear both Baillie and the evening Water Gate concert with Gladys Swarthout.

THOUGH river concerts are generally lighter than winter fare, there will be at least four novelties heard during the hot weather. Ravel's piano concerto (not the one for left hand alone but the later one for both hands) will be played by Zadel Skolovsky.

Howard Mitchell, the orchestra's new conductor and musical director of both summer and winter concerts, will conduct the Washington premiere of Elie Siegmeister's Sunday in Brooklyn, and Benjamin Britten's Soirees Musicales. The Britten has been played in town but not by the large orchestra. And it is no mistake to include Jane Pickens in the novelty class—some novelty, and some class!

And Brahms' Alto Rhapsody will be sung for the first time by the Potomac. Next Sunday's music page will give the full story of the entire four weeks' season. Station WMAL is carrying the Sunday programs from 9:30 to 10:30.

RONALD ARNATT'S organ recital this evening over Station WCFM is of music by Bach, Pachelbel, Buxtehude, and Palestrina.

Baltimore's Museum of Art is presenting three midsummer concerts in their rose garden. July 12, 26, and August 9, are the dates, all Tuesdays. Shura Dvorine, pianist, the Philadelphia Trio, and a chamber orchestra under Hugo Weisgall are the events.

Students this week include those of Marie Seuel-Holst today at 3:30 at 1418 Rhode Island. At 4 Adeline Croft presents Dorothy Myers in a piano recital in her home studio. Tomorrow John Marville's voice pupils will sing at 8:15 in Pierce Hall.

Of the week's scanty musical fare, only Paul Callaway's choral program today is outstanding. P. H.

Orchestral Prizes Given by Critics

The annual orchestral award of the New York Music Critics' Circle for the outstanding American composition accorded a first New York performance during the season has been given to Norman Dello Joio's "Variations, Chaconne and Finale," according to Miles Kastendieck, circle president. Originally called "Three Symphonic Dances," it was premiered by the Pittsburgh Symphony and Reiner in January, 1948, and played here last December by the New York Philharmonic with Walter conducting.

The circle made no awards for dramatic or chamber music.—(AP).

Record Player

New Waxing Of Prokofiev Ballet Suite

PROKOFIEV: Scythian Suite. Philadelphia Orchestra under Ormandy. Columbia 827. $3.95. LP 4142. $4.85, with Respighi: Feste Pomane.

Washington's Philadelphia Orchestra subscribers heard their version of this early Prokofiev ballet music this season.

Ormandy conducts this kind of music with technical control and dramatic flair. The personality of this orchestra is perfectly suited to such a display of sound and excitement and the recording is clear and resonant.

Comparing it with a recent Victor version of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra shows the Midwest players under Defauw employing a less blended tone. But blend is not always the ultimate desideratum in orchestral balance. Great composers often write music of contrast which loses its essential characteristics when fused into one solid melange.

The Chicago version is also more sharply recorded so that the tone bites with greater savagery. This is appropriate in the suite, a barbaric page at every moment. Either recording will satisfy most listeners. The music is powerful and enormously compelling.

"Swing Low, Sweet Chariot." Paul Robeson, baritone, with Lawrence Brown, pianist. Columbia 819. $4.35. LP 2038, with other spirituals.

Robeson's latest release includes the title song of the album together with "Git on Board," "Poor Wayfarin' Stranger," "Lil' David," "Hear de Lambs a-Cryin'," and others.

There is little difference in these spirituals and the many others Robeson has waxed for Columbia. His voice has the same combination of sweetness and rough edges, and he puts in the same feeling that has always been his trade mark. The recording is as good as ever.

LISZT: Les jeux d'eaux a la villa d'Este. Jose Iturbi, pianist. Victor 12-0921. $1.25.

Ravel and Debussy learned much from this impressionist music. It is Liszt's version of the play of waters in a fountain in Italy.

The ripple and flow of sound is accurately mirrored in Iturbi's account of the music. He plays it straight-forwardly and at a reasonable speed. Piano tone is clear and remarkably accurate. Recordings such as this remind us of the fine Pianist Iturbi once was and can still be when he forgets his Hollywoodisms.

Mozart: Bassoon Concerto in B Flat. Leonard Sharrow, bassoon, with NBC Symphony under Toscanini. Victor 1304. $2.50.

This is one of the most charming and skillful concertos in the whole Mozart repertoire. Very early (K. 191) in Mozart's career, it has a mature sense of form, perfect balance between movements, and a superb style in writing for fascinating sound and technique of the bassoon.

Sharrow is a master of the tubular solo. Toscanini lets the orchestra bounce in proper style without driving it a bit. We must admit a lingering affection for the older Victor version played by the fabulous French bassoonist, Oubradous, but the cal clarity not owned by the new set has sharper tone and clarity throughout. This is music belonging in every record collection.

Beethoven: Fantasy in G Minor; Sonata in F sharp; also: Mendelssohn: Song Without Words in G Major. Rudolf Serkin, pianist. Columbia 816. $4.

One of the best bargains in records in a long time is also one of the best albums musically. Serkin plays these Beethoven works with absolute understanding and beautiful tone. The fantasy and sonata follow each other in the recording as they did when the composer wrote them one after another.

The Mendelssohn is similarly fortunate, and the recording the best.—P. H.

Soviets Nix Plan Of Ballet Troupe To Tour Russia

Amherst, Mass., June 25 (AP).—Assistant Secretary of State Willard Thorp said recently that Russia had rejected an offer by the American Ballet Theater to send a company of outstanding American dancers to the Soviet Union.

The Soviet, in rejecting the offer, said:

"We are sure that it would be highly beneficial for the American ballet dancers to acquaint themselves with the achievement of the ballet in our country, which has stepped up to a new higher level of perfection during the days of the Soviet power."

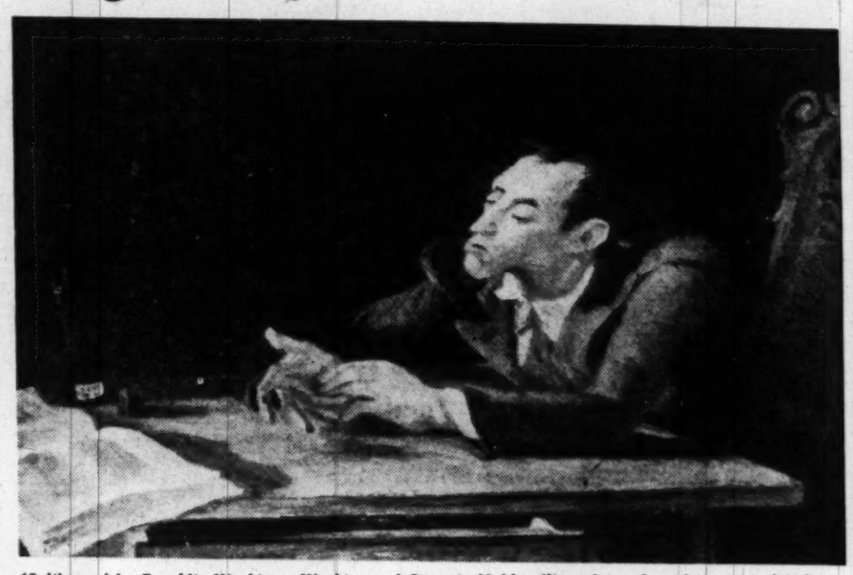
Judges Set for Corcoran Annual



'Soliloquy,' by Franklin Watkins. Watkins and Oronzio Maldarelli, sculptor, have been named judges of the annual Washington show to be held at the Corcoran Gallery

By Jane Watson Crane

THE Corcoran Gallery, burnt by last year's experience with a jury of three for selection and awards in the local annual, will rely on the judgment of one next season. Paintings, water colors, drawings and prints will be chosen by no less a person than Franklin Watkins, a painter who stands at the top of his profession.

Another innovation will be the segregation of sculpture and ceramics, which will be judged and picked by a man of comparable standing—the sculptor Oronzio Maldarelli, professor at Columbia University in New York.

Both jurors were selected by officers of the organizations representing the artists themselves.

The announcement of this chain of auspicious circumstances was recently made by Director Hermann Williams as a result of a meeting held by the artists at the Corcoran. Now that the decisions have been made and the consents given, artists and officials can heave a sigh of relief, free to contend with summer heat rather than heated feelings.

Plea to Artists

THIS season Henry Varnum Poor, another courageous painter-juror, made a much-publicized plea to artists not to hold back their work from the jury-selected group shows. Not unnaturally, as the practice of throwing out all but a handfull of work submitted became the thing for jurors to do, the artists showed less eagerness to go to the trouble and expense of sending to local, regional and national shows. The more reputation they had, the greater their reluctance to risk the ax that was swinging so widely and in some instances so ruthlessly. The only way that the ground lost can be recovered is for the artists themselves to build up the quality of the exhibitions by submitting the best they have to offer.

Amidst all the hullabaloo raised about the jury system and group exhibitions this year, one fact emerged with reasonable clarity. The estimable aim of raising standards cannot be realized simply by "cracking down," particularly in view of the wide area of disagreement concerning what the standards are. The weighty symposia that were held on the subject of modern art and its validity merely added to the confusion. By and large, the only clear voices raised were those of the artists themselves.

At the Art Students League this spring, John Sloan, veteran of many art controversies, came out once again with a denunciation of absolutism of either right or left. He attacked the branding of artists by the "art-punchers," according to the term which seemed most convenient by which to catalogue them. Sloan, who began his career as an artist-reporter, declared: "I have been for modern art ever since the Armory show of 1913. It was great medicine for me, and I flatter myself that I have used it for what was good for my work." But he warned his audience to be on guard against what he called the academy of modernism, which is the enemy of any artist who wants to be independent. He likened the art world to a merry-go-round, "with everybody having a fine time—everybody a chance at the brass ring . . . But no brands."

Jury Veteran

FRANKLIN WATKINS is one of the few American artists who have escaped branding. He is an individualist whose work defies classification. He is an experienced teacher and a veteran of many juries. He won the first Clark prize at the Corcoran in 1939, and has paintings in most of the leading art museums and galleries in this country.

Maldarelli won one of the early commissions for sculpture to be given by the Fairmount Park Association, which is now holding the international sculpture exhibition at the Philadelphia Museum. He has a figure in the Federal Postoffice building here in Washington, and has executed many other commissioned works and exhibition pieces.

The fourth annual exhibition work by artists of Washington and vicinity will open November 10 and will continue through December 18. All entries are due October 27 and 28, 1949. Any artist residing within 50 miles of Washington may submit work in one of the listed categories.

Art Notes

Show Opens Today in Silver Spring

THE Silver Spring Art Gallery is opening an exhibition of paintings, sculpture and ceramics by members of the Studio Group of Washington this afternoon at 4. Charles Stotler of the Nationary Gallery staff will give an informal illustrated talk on "Technic and Modern Painting." The gallery is at 9216 Flower avenue in Silver Spring. The exhibition will be on view all summer.

Exhibitions in art museums that related to contemporary living used to be a rarity. They now take their place in museum programs as a matter of course and are among the most popular features offered. The latest to be announced is a show devoted to contemporary design in home furnishing and household objects to be held at the Detroit Institute of Arts September 11 to November 20. Work for the show began in October, 1948. The intent is to present a comprehensive survey of design in this field, with items from a number of foreign countries as well as the native products. The exhibition, which will cover 12,000 square feet of wall space, will be selective. Complete rooms and parts of rooms will be built in the Great Hall of the Institute.

The Creative Art Studio, which is run by Cornelia Yuditsky, formerly head of the community-sponsored Children's Art Center, has moved to a new home at 1913 Eye st. nw. The studio, which recently had an exhibition of work at the AVC Clubhouses, has won seven Nation-wide awards in art competitions this year.

The division of graphic arts of the Smithsonian is showing a special exhibition of selected prints acquired through the Charles W. Dahlgreen Fund. Also shown is a group of etchings by the donor, who in 1945 presented the institution with a large number of his etched plates, with the stipulation that they be printed and sold to the public at moderate prices, the proceeds to be used to augment and enhance the Smithsonian graphic arts collection. Among prints purchased through this means are works by William Blake, Honore Daumier, Francisco Goya, Toulouse-Lautrec and Anders Zorn.

SOLUTION OF LAST WEEK'S PUZZLE

WNBW Being Carefully Reared by Mama NBC

Moody, and "Here's Archer," a Thursday afternoon song recital by Gene Archer.

Locally, WNBW prides itself on "introducing more local sponsors to television and having a greater total of sponsors than any other Washington TV station."

"Television Journal," which stars Johnny Bradford, has had more than 65 separate advertisers using spot announcements and this is a distinction which is of at least as much importance if not more than its election as favorite local program in Washington in a "Teleguide" poll.

Taking stock on the physical side, WNBW (Channel 4) finds itself with a 350-foot tower high enough up in the city to give it good reception throughout the area. (It also happens, by virtue of being on the Wardman Park grounds, to be the most conspicuous TV tower in Washington, and the one most calculated to make the tourist ask, "What station is that?")

The transmitter, an RCA TT-5A, was the first postwar television transmitter manufactured by RCA. The studio, largest and highest of the local facilities, has equipment for both 16mm and 35mm sound film.

Million a Minute

SCIENTIFICALLY, WNBW has been busy. When RCA introduced ULTRAFAX, the communications system by which words are transmitted at the rate of one million a minute, WNBW's antenna was used to send the material to the Library of Congress where the goggle-eyed Government officials, military men and press, were gathered for the official premiere. The equipment here is also used for ultra-high frequency tests—important if TV gets assigned UHF bands in the future as appears certain.

McANDREW

A radio relay from Washington to Philadelphia which can be used for TV in place of the coaxial cable, is also being used experimentally by WNBW technicians. And this station has participated in synchronizing experiments with WNBT in New York, to give set owners in the critical areas clear pictures.

Major change in personnel during the two years has been the promotion of Carleton D. Smith, who formerly managed WRC and WNBW here, to director of the NBC television network in New York. William R. McAndrew is now manager of the NBC stations here, under Frank M. Russell, NBC's vice president in Washington. Eugene Juster is program director, Mahlon Glascock is director of sales and Donald Cooper is engineer in charge.

At the Bridge Table

D. C. Players Await Baltimore Tournament

By Marian H. Barre

TOURNAMENT fans will spend the Fourth of July holidays as they have spent them for 11 years past, at a tournament—but its locale has been changed to Baltimore instead of Annapolis. What would have been the twelfth annual Carvel Hall Championships has now become the first annual under the joint sponsorship of the Washington and Maryland Bridge Leagues, to be held at the Emerson Hotel.

Events on the program are men's and women's pairs at 8:30 p. m., July 1. Mixed pairs on July 2, initial session starting at 2:15, last round at 8:30 p. m.—not an elimination game. Open pairs Sunday, qualifying round at 2:15, finals at 8:30. Open teams-of-four on Independence Day, a two-session match at 12:30 and 6 p. m. Alvin Landy will direct.

Though allegedly a first annual, it has defending champions, carried over from 1948 in Annapolis when Mrs. Allan Rutherford-Mrs. Sara Zeskind were leading ladies; J. G. Stone-L. G. Tubbs, leading men; Miss M. Hamilton-A. Schlesinger, mixed champs; Fred L. Karpin-J. J. Parish, open champions, and the line-up of Denny, Surrock, Hunter, Whitaker and Behrend led the team field. The ratio was 60 per cent for Baltimore, Washington 40; a state of affairs Capitalites hope to rectify. Leaders from each league serve as cochairmen of committees, as listed on the program:

Executive committee, Joseph Grinsfelder, Maryland, L. R. Tubbs, Washington. Hospitality, W. W. Garthe, Baltimore. C. C. Johnson, D. C. Tournament committee, Charles Shapiro, Dr. N. J. McHugh of Baltimore and Washington, respectively.

TOMORROW, being a "last Monday," brings the Federal Bridge League's master point monthly at a strategic time to serve as a practice round for the tourney. Play starts at 8 p. m. at 1300 New Hampshire ave., Paul Golden directing. The game is open to members' friends.

On Wednesday at 8 p. m. in Hotel Roosevelt, winners at all local games played in May will meet in a struggle for the double awards offered monthly by the Washington Bridge. This is the third engagement restricted to the "gentry." But members on whom fortune failed to smile will compete in other sections for the usual bimonthly national points. Regularly scheduled on each fourth Wednesday, the game was postponed because of the league's team-of-four annual.

Mrs. H. G. Campbell, president of the women's auxiliary, called an executive committee meeting on June 24, when the newly appointed chairmen of committees met together for the first time with the officers and board members elected at the annual meeting on May 21. The appointees are:

Mrs. C. E. Meissner, welfare committee; Mrs. Mary Goodstein, membership; Mrs. Charles Richter, hospitality committee; Mrs. J. G. Fletcher, ways and means; Mrs. W. F. Million, publicity. Mrs. S. H. Beasley was reappointed to serve as parliamentarian.

CONCLUDED last Wednesday at the Roosevelt, the W. B. L. annual team-of-four championship resulted in a tie between the team of Mrs. M. Boschan, Mrs. R. H. Skinner, Lewis, and Lloyd Tubbs, with J. G. Stone, Colonel Skinner, Miller Roberts, George Dickerman, each with 37½ boards after they had split rounds, Boschan winning the first session, Stone, the finals.

Good Wife, But Very Little Else

By John Crosby

NYHT News Service

"MY GOOD WIFE," an added starter on N. B. C. (9:30 p. m. E. D. T. Fridays), is another comedy about a young married couple, as if we needed another one. I must admit this one is a little different. This married couple, Steve and Kay Emerson, are not nearly so fast with a wisecrack as, say, Lucille Ball and her husband on "My Favorite Husband" one hour earlier the same night on C. B. S. Great night for matrimony, Fridays, and if those two programs don't provide enough for you, tune in Dorothy Dix at 1:45 in the afternoon. She'll tell you how to win back an erring husband.

I haven't yet made up my mind whether the Emersons' ineptness at repartee is deliberate—after all, not every wife talks like Groucho Marx—or whether the script writer isn't very good at it either. Anyhow, whether by accident or design, the Emersons are a very restful young couple, possibly a little too restful to get anywhere in the entertainment world. In radio, they're a real novelty.

Winner on Points

AS A WIFE Arlene Francis who plays Kay Emerson wins out on points over Lucille Ball. In other regards—talent and looks, for example—Miss Ball is way out front. But how long could you live with a girl who says: "Oh, we don't miss television. I climb in the Bendix and sing and George looks at me through the little window." Imagine having a girl around the house who said things like that before breakfast. It'd curdle the milk.

"My Good Wife" started out at a gallop two weeks ago, N. B. C. deciding to set the stage and get everything out of the way all at once. The first program resembled one of those synopses of previous installments in the popular magazines. Steve met Kay, quarreled with her, married her, taught her how to drive, learned he was about to become a father, and became one—all in 15 minutes. One minute later, the dialogue went like this:

"It doesn't seem like we've been married 12 years."

"We've been married 10 years."

"Well, that's why it doesn't seem like 12."

That, incidentally, is a little brighter than the conversation around the Emerson household generally gets.

Down to a Walk

ON THE second show of the series, the pace settled down to a walk. During the first few minutes the Emersons and their neighbors lay around lazily on the grass, not even talking very much. This may be taking realism too far. I mean there ought to be some crickets chirping or something. Things quickened a bit later when Mrs. Emerson decided she was going to help her husband out with his law practice and, of course, messed things up.

Playing Themselves

MY FAVORITE young married couple is still Ozzie and Harriet Nelson—I put Goodman and Jane Ace off in another category entirely—and, while we're chatting about this sort of thing, I ought to point out that Ricky and David Nelson, Ozzie and Harriet's children, are now playing themselves on that program, which solves a lot of problems. I have a spy in the Nelson household, named—in case any congressional ears are pricking—Harriet Nelson nee Harriet Hilliard and she is not now and has never been a Communist nor worked on the atom bomb nor designed the B-36.

Anyhow, my spy informed me the Nelsons had a little trouble with the kids. The real Ricky and David listened to the radio Ricky and David and discovered them doing things they weren't allowed to do or wouldn't do voluntarily if they were allowed. Being children, they got confused over their own identities. Well, now the real Ricky and David are also the radio Ricky and David and the danger of split personalities in the kids has been averted. You run into a lot of funny problems in radio.

Miss Wood is supported by a cast of Broadway professionals. Judson Laire is cast as Papa, Malcolm Keene as Uncle Chris, Rosemary Rice as Katrin, age 15, Dickie van Patten as Nels, age 16, Iris Mann as Dagmar, aged 8, and Ruth Gates as Aunt Jenny.

The tour is sponsored by the American Association of School Administrators and Michigan State College. The CBS visit is the only part of the tour schedule devoted to radio and television. The rest of the itinerary will be devoted to inspection of educational institutions and methods in various parts of this country and Mexico.

Description

After taking part in a CBS-TV "People's Platform" debate, James S. Martin, former chief of the Decartelization Branch of the AMG in Germany, wrote Producer Robert Allison this impression of appearing before the television cameras: "Sitting in front of all that equipment is something like being the sacrificial goat in a Buck Rogers model of the Spanish Inquisition." But he liked the program: "I think you are doing a very good pioneering job in developing a TV program with content."

Jefferson Caffery . . . former Ambassador of France, appears today at 1 p. m. on WARL in the Georgetown University Radio Forum

"A top-heavit favory."

"Get your Toni herm pomonent."

"And the price is micoscropic."

"Seeping on a Slealy is like seeping on a cowd."

"Be sure to mail us a dozen gladiolus bulbs, and we'll send you a box top right away."

Bergen Off to Europe

Edgar Bergen is leaving for Europe with his wife today. After three weeks in Italy and Switzerland, he returns to New York and gets ready for three or four weeks of vaudeville in Boston and Canada to "get my voice ready" for the October 2 start of his CBS radio program.

Boy to Help WNBW Mark Its Birthday

Television station WNBW will celebrate a double birthday tomorrow, the day marking the station's second full year of video broadcasting in Washington, D. C.

By diligently checking the records of the Office of Vital Statistics, the station staff has discovered a 2-year-old youngster who was born only a few minutes before the station went on the air for the first time two years ago.

Blond and blue-eyed Steven Alan Sutton, 3408 13th st. se., Washington, was born at Columbia Hospital here at 6:25 p. m., June 27, 1947, just eight minutes before WNBW telecast its opening day sign on test pattern.

On Monday, Steven and his parents will visit WNBW's studios at the Wardman Park Hotel. There will be a double birthday celebration on WNBW's Television Journal program at 6-6:50 p. m. NBC Washington General Manager William R. McAndrew will take part in the celebration, which will be complete with paper hats and a birthday cake. Featured on the Television Journal will be kinescope recording film excerpts from WNBW's opening program two years ago, including remarks by NBC's Washington Vice President Frank M. Russell, who outshone the entertainers on the program by frankly asking his wife, watching on TV, "How do I look?"

Young Steven Alan Sutton is the only child of Lieut. (USNR) and Mrs. Roger J. Sutton, natives of Peoria, Ill., who have been in Washington for 2½ years. Lieutenant Sutton is with the photographic section of Air Warfare at the Navy Department.

Pacific War Film

The March of Time organization which edited the film material available on the European war to make the TV series, "Crusade in Europe," has just begun work on a film using shots made in the Pacific area. The announcement of the new film series was made by Roy E. Larsen, president of Time, Inc., producers of the March of Time films.

Triple Assist Puts Out Fire

GALLITZIN, Pa. (U.P.)—The crew of a passing Pennsylvania Railroad train was credited with an assist in putting out an early morning fire.

The locomotive crew noticed that the roof of a home was on fire as they passed through the town, so they radioed the next railroad tower. The towerman called the local police chief and the alarm was sounded.

The occupants of the home didn't know there was a fire until the firemen arrived.

'Home, Sweet Home'

Whistle Stopping

The Admirable Admiral

By Orval Hopkins

AS ONE of the presidential candidates found out last fall, there's nothing like laying it on the line. Take B. R. Pease, for instance. Pease is manager of the Admiral Hotel, Cape May, N. J. Apparently he has no minion to hack out publicity for him, so he does it himself. Types it himself, too, if I'm any judge. Pease lays 'em right on the table, aces first: "We think our hotel is one of the finest on the Jersey coast. It is strictly fireproof. We are located directly on the ocean. We have our own salt-water swimming pool, with beach, and our own tennis courts, which are free to our guests. We also have our own bowling alleys. Our guest rooms are unusually large and comfortable, and our service is excellent . . ." It goes on like that. You can count the adjectives on one hand. It's simple, it's factual. It's almost unbelievable. Greetings, Pease.

The strand at Palm Beach

A TOUR to the Willard Wright, Nags Head, N. C., which includes a performance of "The Lost Colony," Paul Green's drama, starts from here next Saturday at noon. Stabler's Ticket Mart has more dope on it.

THE PALM BEACHES, meaning those places in Florida, are fixing up a package vacation plan which provides for a week on the sand, in the sea and among the pub-crawlers of that State to the south. The whole thing is being planned by the Chamber of Commerce and A. Kelly Shelton, representing same, is in town today with all kinds of detailed information about it. Eastern and National Airlines serve the area.

REVISION of time schedules for American Presidents Liners to permit passengers to have more time in port is announced by George Killion, head announcer for the firm. The extra shore leave is provided by reducing turn-around time at terminal ports. Under the new thing, for example, you arrive in Manila at noon and sail at midnight the third day. Just how much more time this gives you than you had before, Am. Pres. doesn't say. I have every confidence, however, that it's at least time to toss in one more Philippine beer than you could toss in previously.

THINGS ARE PICKING UP not at all in the publicity dodge, viz. the following: "Shutterbugs, trigger flippers, camera cooties, fans, or whatever you may call yourself, will have a very good chance to pick up some extra money this summer in connection with the second season of the Chicago Railroad Fair." Anyway, it goes on to say the fair opened yesterday in Burnham Park, and that they're giving away money for photographs. Black and white as well as color prints will be judged and separate awards given. Winners in each case will receive $200, with runners-up getting $100. Third, fourth and fifth places will be good for $50, $25 and $15, respectively, and the Santa Fe Railway, which is sponsoring the contest, is throwing in 25 merit awards of $10 each and 50 honorable mentions of $5 apiece. What could you lose?

FREE NIGHTLY concerts start July 4 in Ocean City, N. J. The new 18-piece ensemble is directed by Victor J. Marrandino and will give two concerts each night . . . A seven-day program of sports competitions for children will be staged in Asbury Park, N. J., during a Youth Week Festival starting August 17 . . . For the first time this year, New Jersey will send a "Seafood Princess" to the National Seafood Festival at Hampton, Va., in September. The lovely creature will be chosen July 3 . . . A dispatch from Fredericton, N. B., Canada, says all New Bruswick highways are passable at this time and generally in good condition. Some construction projects are now under way, but all roads permit traffic to move satisfactorily . . . Accommodations are available on all ships of the Cunard White Star line for sailings to Europe in late summer and early fall, the line says. "Commencing with the August 5 sailing of the Queen Elizabeth and on all subsequent sailings immediate offers of space can be made on applications for first-class accommodation in all liners of the fleet" is the official word.

BOAC is reducing its round-the-world fare from $1979 to $1886 . . . Miami reports that during last winter, 416,000 persons attended 52 outdoor concerts, sponsored by the City of Miami in Bayfront Park, and not one was delayed or canceled by inclement weather.

Wolfe's Home To Open Soon

Asheville, N. C.—The "Old Kentucky Home," where Thomas Wolfe resided in his youth, has been formally transferred to the Thomas Wolfe Memorial Association of Asheville and will be opened to the public by midsummer.

The house is now being reconditioned and decorated as it was in the days when Wolfe resided there. Old furniture and family mementos are being placed just as they were in the early twenties.

"Old Kentucky Home" was operated as a boarding house by Wolfe's mother and was made famous in his book "Look Homeward Angel" as Eliza Grant's boarding house, "Dixieland."

Aspen To Play Host For Geothe Bicentennial

ADDED to the hundreds of vacationers who come each summer to the Colorado Rockies for relaxation and sport will be new groups this year who will combine with their rest and enjoyment of scenery attendance at the International Goethe Bicentennial Convocation and Music Festival to be held in Aspen, Colo., June 27-July 17. This Aspen adventure will be something unique for the 2000 who can be accommodated at each of the two series of concerts and lectures.

The city dweller, the energetic vacationer ready for pack-trips, hunting and fishing, the music lover and the scholar all will find a visit to Aspen worth while.. The historic Hotel Jerome, restored to the Victorian splendor of the silver boom days of the '90's; the Roaring Fork Inn, the Prince Albert, guest cottages, motor courts and private homes are ready to welcome guests.

Ski races, rodeos, riding, swimming and tennis will be mingled with concerts by Dimitri Mitropoulos and the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, Arturo Rubinstein, Nathan Milstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Erica Morini, Dorothy Maynor, Herta Glaz and others.

From French Equatorial Africa will come Dr. Albert Schweitzer to speak on "Goethe: His Personality and His Work." Norway's Halvdan Koht, Gerardus van der Lecuw from the Netherlands, Giuseppe Antonio Borghese from Milan and America's Thornton Wilder will join other scholars of equal importance to present a study of the influence of Goethe on modern civilization.

Concerts and lectures will be held in the new amphitheatre under construction on the banks of the Roaring Fork River where fighting mountain trout are a constant challenge to the fisherman.

From East or West, by plane, train, bus or private car, every approach to Aspen is a memorable scenic journey through the unparalled Thousand Peaks country. Excellent mountain highways offer a wonderful choice of trips, every approach rich in frontier history and mountainous grandeur. For those flying their own or chartered planes, Aspen Airport offers a 4500 foot air strip, 200 feet wide, with tie-downs, fuel and oil available.

Detailed information on dates and programs of the Goethe Convocation and Music Festival, on sports and facilities may be obtained from Charles O. Bishop, manager, Aspen Properties, Aspen, Colo.

Zuider Zee Now Fresh Water Lake

Amsterdam, Holland.—The Zuider Zee is now a fresh water lake renamed the Ijssel Meer as the result of the North Sea inclosing dike built in 1931. Eventual draining will reclaim 544,000 acres of farm land. Fish now caught are fresh water—no longer salt water species.

Western Tours

The Rock Island Lines this summer will handle 12 all-expense tours to Colorado, California and Yellowstone. These tours vary in length from a week to two weeks and in price from $146.93 for an eight-day vacation in Colorado, coach style, to $310.03 for Pullman accommodations on a two-week trip to California.

The Banner Yellowstone tour leaves Chicago each Sunday, June 26 to September 4, inclusive. The all-Pullman trip West is made via the Gallatin Gateway, returning to Chicago through Salt Lake City, the Royal Gorge and Denver.

In order to facilitate ticket purchases and save travelers' time, the Rock Island has inaugurated a "will call" service in all of its city ticket offices. Patrons are asked to telephone the downtown offices in advance of their trips, explain their destinations and any services they may wish, then pick up tickets later.

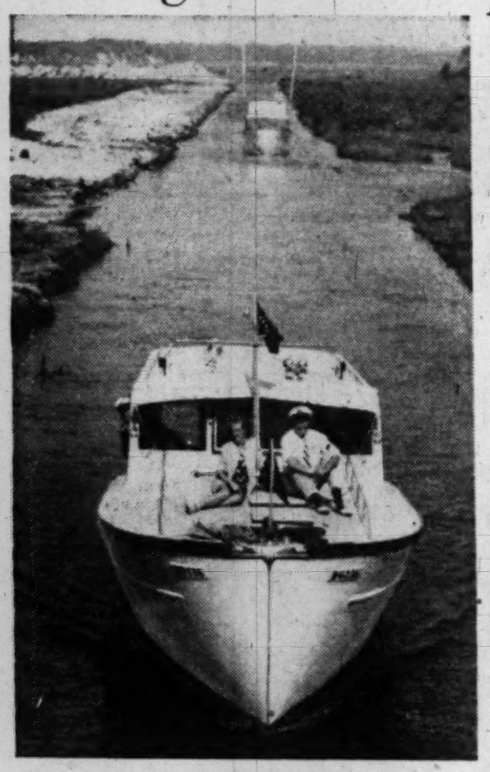
Boat Canal Dug At Virginia Beach



Pleasure craft from the Cavalier Yacht and Country Club are shown leaving Broad Bay on their way to Lynnhaven Inlet through the new canal, recently opened. This route cuts 40 minutes from running time to Broad and Linkhorn Bays and opens the inland water to pleasure craft and fishing boats up to 3½ feet in draw and 12 feet from waterline to topmast

VIRGINIA BEACH, VA.—Skippers of cruisers, fishing boats and pleasure craft which, heretofore, found the going slow and precarious on trips into the waters behind Lynnhaven Inlet now may take their craft into Virginia Beach without fear of running aground.

A new Beach canal, connecting Broad Bay with Lynnhaven Inlet, has recently been completed and boats already are finding the route far superior to the more circuitous passage through Long Creek. Designed for general use and to open the Cavalier Yacht and Country Club berthing to all boats, the new waterway, three-quarters of a mile in length, was dredged by Ames & Webb, Inc., of Norfolk, at a cost of approximately $4000. A new high-level highway bridge built over the canal cost approximately $8000. Plans and funds for the project were advanced by the Beach Channel Association, a group of Virginia Beach sportsmen.

The channel itself is 30 feet wide and 5 feet deep in its entirety. The fixed highway bridge allows an overhead clearance of 12½ feet at mean high water.

Completion of the canal ends a plan conceived several years ago by members of the Cavalier Club to open their yacht basin for all boats. Last summer a channel was dredged between Linkhorn and Broad Bays, through what is known as the Narrows. Four feet in depth and 30 feet wide, this Narrows channel cost $2500, but did not eliminate the run through the narrow draw of Long Creek Bridge or the slow run through the creek itself. With the new canal, running time is cut by 40 minutes each way.

Water in Linkhorn Bay is about 10 feet in depth, while Broad Bay is roughly 5 feet deep. This will allow for most pleasure craft and fishing and oyster boats to navigate easily, without fear of running aground.

Old Cemetery

In visiting Bath, N. C.—oldest town in Tar Heelia—you undoubtedly will be directed to ancient St. Thomas Church, oldest in the State. When you go down the aisle, you will be walking over an ancient graveyard. Settlers buried some of their dead under the church, to protect them against Tuscarora Indians, who terrorized early colonials.

'English Spoken'

San Juan, Puerto Rico.—Members of the taxi drivers union, the bus drivers union and hotel and restaurant union, cooperating with the Tourism Advisory Board, are taking courses in English built around the vocabularies used in these occupations with which tourists have frequent contact. It's all part of a unified program to simplify the problems of visitors to Uncle Sam's growing tourist center in the Caribbean.

Dog Track Opens At Moorehead City

Morehead City, N. C.—The second annual Carolina Racing Association's 92-day summer meet is on at the Morehead City Greyhound Track.

Over 400 of America's outstanding greyhounds have arrived in Carteret County to take part. This year there will be 10 races each evening (excepting Sundays).

Plan Car Trip Well, Advises Keystone Club

DECLARING that "well-planned vacations are the best," the Keystone Automobile Club offers some advice to motorists who are about to set out on long motoring jaunts.

"Those experienced in travel," said William A. Armstrong, touring bureau manager of the club, "know that the amount of enjoyment and profit extracted from a vacation on wheels depends in large measure upon how well the trip is planned and organized. One mistake many vacationing motorists make is trying to travel too far and do too much. If you think, for instance, that you can maintain a driving schedule of 450 miles per day over a two-week period, cut it down to 300 miles and you'll be safer and happier.

"Another error to guard against is trying to budget expenses too closely. Unexpected things are bound to come up. Figure expenses generously and then add some more for a safe margin. If the total's too great for your pocketbook, replot your plans. Another hazardous aspect of vacations is the universal tendency to overeat and sleep irregularly. Remember, regular living habits are far more important away from home than at home. Don't risk spoiling your trip by breaking a lot of tried and true rules of living."

Ontario Fish Regulations Issued for Year

Ontario angling regulations for 1949 are substantially the same as those in force during the 1948 season. The only changes are that the trout and pickerel seasons have been advanced two days in each case to permit opening of the season on a Saturday. License fees for nonresident anglers are the same price as for several years—$5.50 for an individual license and $8 for a family license.

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
June 26, 1949

While her four-year-old date waits patiently downstairs, Elaine, 3, dawdles in her bubble bath.

Preening for her first date, Elaine arranges coiffure with care. Meanwhile boy friend below has started to squirm.

Just like a woman, Elaine keeps unhappy date waiting 20 minutes. In lifetime, he'll spend month waiting for women.

Just like a man, boy friend ignores Elaine's hair-do and dress, instead enviously ogles candy box he brought her.

The First Date

In our high-pressure age, heavy courting starts at four

ALTHOUGH Keith Muller is only four, he's already twice as sophisticated as Booth Tarkington's immortal Willie Baxter at 17.

Recently Keith, an alert product of a souped-up age, armed himself with a box of candy and a quarter and made a date with a girl next door, Elaine Fleming, three.

Fortified by a woman's intuition, Elaine prepared for this event in the time-honored fashion. She bathed without haste, arranged her hair carefully and tried on three dresses before choosing a fourth.

Waiting downstairs, Keith sat uneasily. He read comic books, chewed four wads of bubble gum, shifted nervously in his chair. But Elaine's arrival restored his aplomb so completely that he conducted himself with truly continental savoir faire. One thing he was spared: interference from Elaine's younger brother, aged just two months.

Date warms up over soda in drugstore. Short of cash, Keith bought only one treat, then shared it with Elaine.

THE TURNING POINT

After the ball, a novel . . .

Frances Parkinson Keyes

An invitation to the carnival ball shaped her career

CARNIVAL DANCERS, masked and brilliantly costumed, swirled by in a pageant of riotous color to the hot blare of a New Orleans jazz band. Watching from a box, author Frances Parkinson Keyes suddenly had an inspiration for a book. She wrote it, and it became her first best-seller.

It was the invitation to the carnival ball, Mrs. Keyes recalls, that proved to be the turning point in her literary career. It came only after more than 20 years of hard work as writer, editor and lecturer. During that time she had written some 19 books and had traveled all over the world on writing assignments.

For years, a friend in the diplomatic service had been urging her to write about politics in his native state–Louisiana.

But Mrs. Keyes had always demurred. "It's just as well to know one's limitations," she said. "I believe I can interpret politics anywhere else in the world. But Louisiana politics–from what I've heard of them – would only baffle me. I couldn't do it."

Eventually, Mrs. Keyes curtailed her world travels to edit a magazine. She did her creative writing after office hours and devoted her vacations to lecturing.

Meanwhile, her friend had retired from diplomatic service. He had long since ceased urging her to write about Louisiana politics, but now he tried a new tack.

COME TO NEW ORLEANS

"Look here," he said one day, "you haven't had a vacation in years. Why not come to New Orleans for the Mardi Gras?"

This time Mrs. Keyes allowed herself to be persuaded. At the very first carnival ball she told her friend:

"I'll tell you what I'll write. It will be about Louisiana–but it will be a novel. I'll call it Crescent Carnival."

That novel of 1942 opened the door to best-seller fame. Since then, Mrs. Keyes has written two others with a like setting– The River Road and Dinner at Antoine's. Sales of both have passed the million mark.

Britain's Princess Margaret, younger sister of heir presumptive Princess Elizabeth, is seen regularly at Mayfair parties. Escorted by numerous young Englishmen, her name has not been definitely linked to any one of them. Married or not, she must help carry public burdens of royal family.

THE OTHER PRINCESS

By BETTY SPENCER SHEW

The world is well acquainted with Princess Elizabeth, heir presumptive to Britain's throne. But it knows far less of her sister, spirited, vivacious Princess Margaret (no longer "Margaret Rose"), whose position is only slightly less important than Elizabeth's. To learn more about Margaret, PARADE asked Betty Spencer Shew, the only woman correspondent accredited to Buckingham Palace, to write the first full report on her to appear in the U. S. It follows.—Ed.

WHEN PRINCESS MARGARET, holiday-making in Italy, was in Florence recently, a party of young Italians gathered one night beneath her balcony window with the romantic idea of serenading her to the twanging music of the guitar.

Scarcely had they begun when—to quote a news report which has the curt finality of a bucket of cold water—"the police sent them away."

That rather forlorn phrase, "the police sent them away," tells quite a lot about the Princess's vacation. For the plain fact is that there are many things, things everybody else takes for granted, that a Princess may not do—even on vacation.

The reason is simply that people will not let her.

For all practical purposes, a bus ride along London's Piccadilly is as far out of reach of the Princess Margaret, younger daughter of Britain's King and Queen, as a journey along the Milky Way. If she were to attempt anything of the sort it would be at the cost of holding up the traffic for blocks, for where she is crowds gather, and with them reporters and photographers.

That is why for Princess Margaret on holiday there are no lazy mornings on the beach in the sunshine, no aperitifs before dinner in the quaint little café on the square.

Noting this, a Rome journalist coined a new title for the Princess. He called her "La Poverina"—"the poor little one."

Many English people felt this was not an overstatement. They protested that the Princess should be left to enjoy her holiday in peace. But the role of "poor little rich girl" doesn't really fit Princess Margaret. Already she knows that even when she is supposed to be enjoying a carefree holiday she can't hope to escape entirely from the embarrassments of publicity.

She accepts philosophically enough the ordinary, everyday restraints forced upon her by the world-wide curiosity about herself and all her doings. Her keen sense of humor aids powerfully in keeping these things in proper proportion. Princess Margaret has too much gaiety to be "La Poverina" for very long.

THE LIFE OF A YOUNG PRINCESS

At Coronation in 1937, Margaret, seven, stood between King George (right) and Queen Mary to peer over Palace balcony.

As Brownie, Princess Margaret had picture taken in 1938. She was eight, and a model for all eight-year-olds.

A year later, Margaret wore medal awarded for first place in swimming race. Solemn here, she was a smiling child.

In early war years, royal children spent most of their time in the country. Elizabeth (left) and Margaret drive ponycart.

Responsibilities of royalty include countless visits to schools, hospitals, institutions. At children's craft school, smiling and gracious Margaret receives bouquet from scantly-clad tot.

An accomplished young woman,

JUST WHAT KIND of a girl is Princess Margaret? Is she quick and determined like her great-great-grandmother, Queen Victoria; serene and womanly like her mother, Queen Elizabeth, or profoundly conscious of her high destiny like her sister Elizabeth?

Briefly, the answer is this. Princess Margaret is endowed with a lively, volatile disposition. She possesses a fund of high spirits. These, however, with a nice sense of tact and of her position as a member of the traditionally non-partisan royal family, she masks on those public occasions when they might be considered out of place.

PRINCESS WITH POKER FACE

Recently, for example, the Princess paid a visit to the House of Commons, and sat there in the gallery while "Willie" Gallacher, the fiery Scot who is one of the two Communist M.P.'s in the House, said rude things about Winston Churchill, and Mr. Churchill's angry supporters hurled back even ruder things about Mr. Gallacher.

Throughout these exchanges Princess Margaret sat with an impassive poker face. Even the most expert mind-reader would have been baffled to know what she was thinking. As an example of diplomacy it was not such a bad effort for a 19-year-old Princess, whose responses are by nature swift, spontaneous and direct. Members of Parliament, who would have resented any sign of partisanship, were impressed.

This visit to the Commons was only one of a number she has made lately to places thought to be of value to her education and to her understanding of a workaday world. These visits have included one to police headquarters at New Scotland Yard, another to a London magistrate's court for young offenders, and a third to the famous "Old Bailey," where, with her sister, she sat through part of a criminal trial.

There is no doubt that these visits added a new stimulus to that liveliness of mind which is Princess Margaret's most striking characteristic. It expresses itself in many ways, particularly in her curiosity about people and the things people do and say. Hers is, in fact, precisely the sort of mind that gets the most out of "going places," and during the royal visit to South Africa in 1947 I saw how eagerly the Princess responded to odd encounters in out-of-the-way spots with all sorts of people whose ways of living could hardly have been more strange to her.

The South African visit did a great deal for Princess Margaret. In particular, it gave her poise and self-assurance, developing all those qualities which allowed her, a year later to discharge with grace and dignity the Now seen increasingly in London's society affairs, Margaret (right) attends charity ball with Duke of Edinburgh and Elizabeth. At such affairs, the two princesses generally have good times.

Like any tourist, Margaret visited Capri's famous Blue Grotto in ordinary rowboat during recent trip to Italy. Exhaustive efforts of press to report her holiday drew sharp English criticism.

Tall, top-hatted Marquess of Blandford (left) has squired Princess Margaret. He also dates Sharmon Douglas, daughter of U.S. envoy.

Princess Margaret takes her place in the world duty of representing her parents at the inauguration of Queen Juliana of the Netherlands in the Hague.

To those who know the Princess best, it was no surprise that for her first holiday in Europe she should have chosen to go to Italy and France.

These are the countries above all others most likely to appeal to her artistic nature. For Princess Margaret inherits in a marked degree the artistic strain, noticeable in successive generations of the royal house.

TALKS MUSIC WITH CRITIC

Especially is this true of her response to music. She is an accomplished pianist, sings very sweetly in a clear soprano, goes frequently to concerts, opera and ballet. Altogether, she possesses a sound enough knowledge of music to hold her own with her cousin, the 26-year-old Earl of Harewood, elder son of the Princess Royal and a professional music critic who writes erudite articles for the "New Statesman," most influential of the left-wing weekly magazines in Britain.

The Princess has a fair knowledge of Italian. In France, however, she was completely at home for like her mother and sister she speaks and reads French fluently. She has more than a passing acquaintance with French literature, especially the contemporary novelists such as Francois Mauriac. She jumped at the opportunity of seeing Molière acted by the Comédie Francaise when the company appeared in London.

The Princess is, indeed, a confirmed theater-goer, with a wide-ranging taste that takes in everything from "High Button Shoes" to the Shakespearian productions of Sir Laurence Olivier, and back again to Danny Kaye, whom she admires greatly. She would probably agree that one of the most amusing evenings she ever spent was at the party given for Danny Kaye by Lewis Douglas, the U.S. Ambassador, last year. Incidentally, Sharmon Douglas, the Ambassador's daughter, has become one of the Princess' most intimate friends.

Possessing an undoubted "dress sense," there are plenty of signs that when she is older, Princess Margaret may become, like her aunt, the Duchess of Kent, a leader of fashion in England. Already the more sophisticated of the "teen-agers" accept her lead when it comes to choosing dresses and accessories.

Like her mother and sister she has a truly beautiful "pink and white" complexion, and like them she still largely favors flattering soft pastels. But in her choice of colors as in her choice of styles, she is less conventional than they are. She took quickly to the "new look" and among the younger set was one of the first to adopt the Paris mode of wearing pearls "choker" fashion.

She now rarely wears the single string of pearls, for years considered the only "nice" jewelry for a young girl. Her favorite five-strand pearl "choker" fastens in front with a large blue enamel and diamond cameo.

Altogether, there is a great deal in the rapidly developing personality of this young Princess to explain the public attention which is increasingly focussed upon her as she moves gracefully out of adolescence into the busy public life shared by British royalty.

Public responsibilities occupy Margaret's time. At party, she chats with Prime Minister Attlee.

Raymond Fernandez, confessed homicidal Romeo, and Mrs. Martha Beck, his companion, arrive at LaGuardia airport to face trial for murder of Albany widow, Mrs. Janet Fay. They were flown from Michigan where they were captured after committing a double killing. Pair were turned over to New York for trial on earlier charges.

IS MURDER A "SHOW"?

The Beck-Fernandez "lonely heart" case lends support to a psychiatrist's conviction

By FRANK GOULD

THERE IS morbid magic in murder. It fills the press, swells courtroom crowds, throws electric excitement into ordinary conversations.

Yet the act of fatal violence can be more than a vehicle for sensationalism and animated gossip.

Sometimes, as in the current Fernandez-Beck "lonely hearts" murder case, it may also be the means of rendering a service to the public.

Reaching a climax this month in New York, this harrowing yet gripping trial may become just such a case. For far beyond its own sphere, it casts a ghastly glare over the nation, focusing attention on a sinister racket of marriage for money and murder.

Singularly, the case coincided with the publication of a remarkably important new book on murder, "Show of Violence," by Dr. Frederic Wertham. A psychiatric consultant in this case, and head of the LaFargue Clinic in New York, that distinguished authority believes that society tends to make of murder nothing more than a superficial drama. For the general public, he declares, it is merely exciting; for the participants, it is occasional tragedy, sometimes exhibitionism, and too often only a political platform.

"We don't condemn murder strongly enough," he declares "or use the full and proper precautions against its recurrence. We have failed to emphasize the vulnerability of the victim and the complacency of the authorities."

Significantly, both elements are evident in two other "lonely hearts" murder cases. A woman in Delaware confessed killing two mail-order fiances. And in Missouri, a modern bluebeard admitted murdering his seventh bride. In each instance, correspondence clubs brought the guilty and their victims together.

At the New York trial of Raymond Fernandez, 34, and his companion, Mrs. Martha Beck, 29, only testimony bearing on the death of a 60-year-old widow, Mrs. Janet Fay, was to have been permitted.

IN THE BACKGROUND, GHOSTS

On the surface and for the court records at least, the case involved only these three individuals. Nevertheless, for observers familiar with the facts, no legal limitations could bar other ghosts from hovering in the background to speak in muted voices of the other victims who had entrusted their savings and their lives to strangers—and lost both.

Perhaps their vengeance lay in the fact that the defendants were the victims of their own emotions.

For by a stroke of poetic justice, Raymond Fernandez and Martha Beck, according to their first confessions (later repudiated, however), met through a lonely hearts club. Both had deserted their families, including several children.

After a brief "courtship" she agreed to pose as his "sister" or "nurse" and to participate in the shakedown of lonely-but-trusting widows.

This insidious conspiracy victimized an amazing number of people. When Fernandez finally confessed, a list of 17 potential correspondence mates was found on him. One of these was Mrs. Janet Fay.

In the Fernandez-Beck fire of passion and murder, this widow was but one other iron. Months before meeting Fernandez, she had been carrying on correspondence with him. Then, last Christmas, Ray and Martha visited her in Albany. She fell in love with Fernandez, sold her house, withdrew her $6,000 savings, and left town with her two new "friends."

On January 4 she was brutally strangled and beaten to death, then buried beneath cement in the cellar of a rented cottage on Long Island. Her whereabouts might never have been known had the slayers not admitted killing her. They confessed while awaiting trial in Michigan for two other murders.

"What about society's sense of guilt?" Dr. Wertham asks in his book. "One has only to look over the uncounted number of unsolved murders to realize how lightly they are taken. In the United States 60 percent of the murderers get away with it. Every two hours a murderer commits a perfect crime."

After Mrs. Fay's death, the couple hurriedly left to visit a new "friendship correspondent" in Byron City, Mich. There, pretty Delphine Downing, 29, widow of an ex-serviceman living alone with her 21-month-old daughter, Rainelle, welcomed them.

Fernandez became truly fond of the young widow, thus arousing Mrs. Beck's explosive jealousy. The

In cellar of a house in Queens, L.I., the remains of Mrs. Janet Fay were unearthed by police. Woman was lonely-but-trusting widow.

Mrs. Delphine Downing, 29, a widow, and her child were slain in this house. Deaths caused capture of the confessed murderers.

Downings were killed and then buried in their own basement.

Suspicious neighbors, missing the mother and child over the week-end, telephoned police. Captured, the professional Romeo confessed, adding, "You got me dead to rights."

But only then did official machinery start grinding. Frantic searches were made through police files. Mrs. Fay's body was located. From New York came further word that in 1947 a Mrs. Jane Wilson, 50, was believed to have accompanied Fernandez (then calling himself Ray Martin) to Spain and never returned. They met through lonely hearts letters. Her death was supposedly due to a "heart attack."

From Arkansas came news that Mrs. Myrtle Young, 42, a correspondent, sold her property and left for Chicago to become "Mrs. Ray Martin." Before the ceremony and her subsequent death, she had deposited $4,000 to their joint account.

A Minnesota widow revealed that she had been swindled by the couple and had been given an overdose of sleeping pills.

DEAD OR ASHAMED TO SPEAK

Taken together, the reports indicated that an unknown number of other victims either could not speak up or were too ashamed to admit they had been fleeced.

In such a light, what Dr. Wertham said in his book sounds like prophesy: "The murder victim is the forgotten man . . . Soon after the victim is removed from the coroner's morgue he is forgotten and lingers only in the morgues of newspapers. We live in a period of general devaluation of life . . ."

Dr. Wertham might also have asked, "Why did we have so little respect for the life of the woman who never returned from Spain?" His own belief is that such lack of respect is consistent with the "show" we put on in prosecuting a crime. Police, prisons, lengthy trials and even the electric chair is insufficient precaution and protection. To protect itself, the public must take murder seriously, not merely as a drama involving others.

There is also the simple fact that had the romance-hungry victims not forgotten Mother's advice, "Beware of strangers!" they would have been more wary, less gullible — and alive.

Upon culmination of the sanghyang or trance dance, a young Balinese dancer is placed on a bamboo pole and carried around to test effectiveness of trance.

Balinese villagers gather around to watch young dancers rehearsing. Long row of kettle-like objects on right is a gamelan, an island musical instrument which produces dull, flat sounds. A tourist mecca before the war, Bali receives only a trickle of visitors today.

Dancers of Bali

Schooled at an early age, their graceful careers are short

ON THE MAGICAL East Indian island of Bali, dancing may come naturally, but the dancers don't.

Renowned throughout the world for their grace, the dancing Balinese are products of long and arduous training.

Young dancers are selected on the basis of beauty, grace and agility by village dancing clubs. Once they qualify, the youngsters — who may be only seven or eight years old — are accorded special treatment, spared from village labor and kept out of the sun as much as possible to insure that their skin remains golden.

At festival times, the young dancers, clothed in all the finery their villages can muster, perform rites like the sanghyang, a dance to repel a mythical beast, the rangda. Climax occurs when dancers have worked themselves into a trance (left).

Their art is demanding and their careers short. Most of them retire in their teens.

Yards of cloth, gaudy head-dresses typify costumes. Make-up features dots.

Young girls with no previous training inhale incense during trance dance.

Dancers, their eyes closed, interpret suggestion of chorus that they are two flowers breaking the wind.

Nine-year-old girl receives instruction from Lotring, a famous dancer in youth.

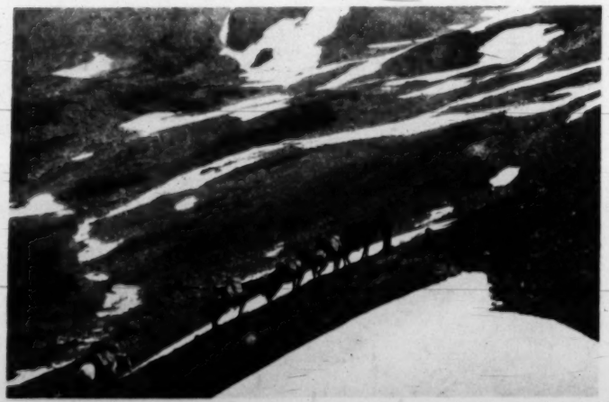
On way to Mt. Assiniboine, trail crosses highland meadows. Riders soon will pause for their first breather in the 35-mile ride.

Camp pitched for the night, riders, like this New Zealand youth and his girl from Montreal, forget saddlesores, join song-fest.

Fording turbulent Spray River, cautious riders, head their horses upstream to assure better footing. Guides watch sharply for spills.



Heavily-laden pack train struggles up slippery shale past lingering snow. This is Assiniboine Pass, leading to base of the peak.

Framed by towering Mount Assiniboine, the Trail Riders file through barren Citadel Pass on

Trail Riders of the Rockies

EXCEPT FOR TEXANS and natives of the Intermountain range country, city-bred horsemen bold enough to venture from well-trod bridle paths have long been almost as rare as cruppers on an automobile.

But if you ask the hardy ones who do survive where they'd most like to ride, they'll probably give you lines like these from Badger Clark's "A Cowboy's Prayer":

"And guide me on the long, dim trail ahead
That stretches up toward the Great Divide."

To such a prayer, they're likely to have an answer. For this summer no less than 20 mounted expeditions in the U. S. and Canada will invade the very heart of the Rockies. One of the oldest—its first expedition was in 1925—the Trail Riders, usually based on Banff, Alberta, will thread through the magnificent wilderness of the Canadian range.

The Trail Riders—the lawyer from St. Paul, the stenographer from Chicago, and the high school student from Boston—do their annual exploring in granite-ribbed Banff National Park in western Alberta.

Each member brings his riding gear — no hunting pinks, please—and private necessities. A $55 fee covers horses, guides, quarters, sleeping bag and food.

THEIR GOAL—MT. ASSINIBOINE

Although the ride's destination varies from year to year, veteran Trail Riders admit an affectionate partiality for the grandeur of the trail to Mount Assiniboine.

"We follow that trail about once every three years," explains Chief Guide Claude Brewster, rancher and mother hen to the 60-odd riders. "Maybe it's because Assiniboine looks a lot like the Matterhorn in Switzerland. Maybe it's because the scenery's so grand. I don't know. But n last leg of five-day outing along scenic trails of Banff National Park in the Canadian Rockies.

At destination, the hungry horsemen wearily slip from mounts for snack. Expedition takes along its own cooks and traveling kitchen.

Snugly housed in tepees in Assiniboine camp, riders give aching muscles chance to rest. After one day's layover, they retrace trail.

Early risers share a nearby stream with placidly curious mule deer. At this time of year, the animals still have velvet on their antlers.

You have to know your way around in a saddle to get to Mt. Assiniboine. But the ride is worth it

I do know that any one who's once made the trip clamors for it again—and soon. So we just have to schedule Assiniboine about every third year."

Assiniboine, 11,870 feet high, is one of the region's loftiest peaks. From Canmore, the ride's jumping-off place, the base of the mountain is about 35 winding miles away. To city riders, it seems the same distance up and down.

While expert horsemen can cover the distance in a day and a half, Brewster allows two days for the packstring to make it. After a day's layover, the party starts back.

While insisting that his charges adhere to a strict over-all schedule, Brewster allows a leisurely start each morning. Up at 7, the riders breakfast from 7:30 until 9.

"I like to let them take their time before the day's grind begins," he says. "This gives them an opportunity for a swim and a chance to treat the sore spots they got the day before. And believe me, they do get sore spots. For most of them, this is the only riding they have from year to year."

About 10 o'clock the group hits the trail. They ride for two hours, then rest for 20 minutes when sandwiches and coffee are served. Seldom is there more than six hours' riding in a day. A one-hour stop for lunch comes around noon. Late in the afternoon of the first day, they reach the half-way permanent camp. That's home for the night. Dinner at six, campfire until 10, and then sleeping bags.

AFTER THE RIDE

Back at Canmore, the Trail Riders disband. The lawyer goes back to his legal briefs, the stenographer to her typewriter, the boy to school. But when another July lopes around, most of them will be back again for another safari on horseback into Canada's high country.

During the ride, Michael Smith, 5, clocked 100th mile on horseback. Riders' co-founder, J. Murray Gibbon, gives him special pin.

It may look complicated, but looks are deceiving because many of these foods are served just as they come from can or package. The rest is easy.

delicious summer smorgasbord

BY BETH MERRIMAN

HERE'S A NOVEL IDEA for effortless, cool entertaining, planned so that the hostess can enjoy her own party! We call it a Summer Smorgasbord, because it is built around fish, a food beloved by Scandinavians.

For the one hot dish you may wish to vary the fish fare with Swedish meat balls in gravy or baked beans. Molded fish salads of salmon, crabmeat or lobster have great eye-appeal, as do the deviled eggs crowned with a shrimp or curled anchovy. Boned, skinless sardines, herring in sour cream, more shrimp, ready to be dipped in mayonnaise, tuna salad, celery stuffed with cheese spread, sweet-sour cucumber slices, radish roses, black olives, crackers and crisp rye wafers and caraway seed cheese complete the spread to everybody's satisfaction.

For Salmon Mousse, sprinkle 1 envelope unflavored gelatine on ½ c. cold water; dissolve over boiling water; cool; add to ¼ c. mayonnaise. Mix 1 lb. can salmon, flaked, 1¼ c. chopped celery, ½ tsp. salt, 1 tbsp. lemon juice, 1 tbsp. capers. Add to mayonnaise mixture. Turn into mold; chill; unmold and garnish. Serves six.

Recipe for youth: 72-year-old Sophie Metke (rear) is interviewed by Don Herbert of "It's Your Life" radio program at meeting of "Oldsters Club in Chicago's Benton Neighborhood House. Activities and companions that suit her age have kept her from feeling old.

OLD AGE IS FUN

So says Sophie Metke. And best of all, she practices what she preaches

"YOU GO CRAZY staying at home," said the gray-haired woman into the microphone. "Not for me! I enjoy life!"

The Speaker: Seventy-two-year-old Mrs. Sophie Metke, of Chicago, telling how she has escaped the old-age blues that beset millions of oldsters abandoned to a life of idleness, boredom, fretting, self-pity, and the agony of feeling "in the way."

The Occasion: One of "The Autumn" broadcasts, a series of five dealing with old age on the "It's Your Life" program over Chicago's radio station WMAQ.

The Reason: Old age is becoming our No. 1 social as well as personal problem. By 1960, 14 million of us—almost a tenth of our population—will be in the over-65 age bracket. What will we do about it?

Because "It's Your Life" old-age authority, professor-emeritus Dr. Anton J. Carlson of the University of Chicago thinks that personal reorientation to old age must go along with social and industrial reorientation, PARADE set about to learn just what makes Mrs. Metke happy.

Going to her pin-neat, $10-a-month, 3-room, cold-water flat in South Chicago, it found some of the answers.

It isn't any of the things we usually think it is that assure happiness in old age. It isn't just money (her main income is an old-age pension of about $45 a month). It isn't family love (she has two sons and six grandchildren, of whom she is very proud, but she refuses to live with them). It isn't dignity (she is calmly looking forward to the day when she can enter a public home for the aged).

Definitely no Whistler's Mother meekly waiting out her days, Sophie Metke is happy because, in spite of years, little money, and no close family life, she is independent.

Prime old-age problem is deciding when old age starts. By the standards of 1790, when life expectancy was only 35 years, even 40 was "old." If, as science promises, the man of the near-future will live to be 100, even 60 will be "young." Socially, and emotionally, we are old when we are badgered into thinking so, usually at 65, by standards of a century ago.

NO RETIREMENT FOR HER

Mrs. Metke, wisely taking up a line of work that age does not greatly affect, sturdily and rightly refuses to retire.

"I'm like a maid to children," she says heartily. "This baby-sitting you hear about is only a fad for young girls. I feed the children and am very good to them, but they don't take advantage of me."

Her amusements are chosen to last until she is 90, if necessary. "I don't go around with a long face. I listen to comedy programs on the air, and go to the movies when they got a good picture like Abbot and Costello."

In addition, she goes on jaunts with the "Old Settlers' Club," leads activities in the local settlement "Oldsters' Club," hops buses and trolleys to sing in the Salvation Army choir, watches for new museum and antique show exhibits, and listens to the band concerts in Grant Park every summer Sunday.

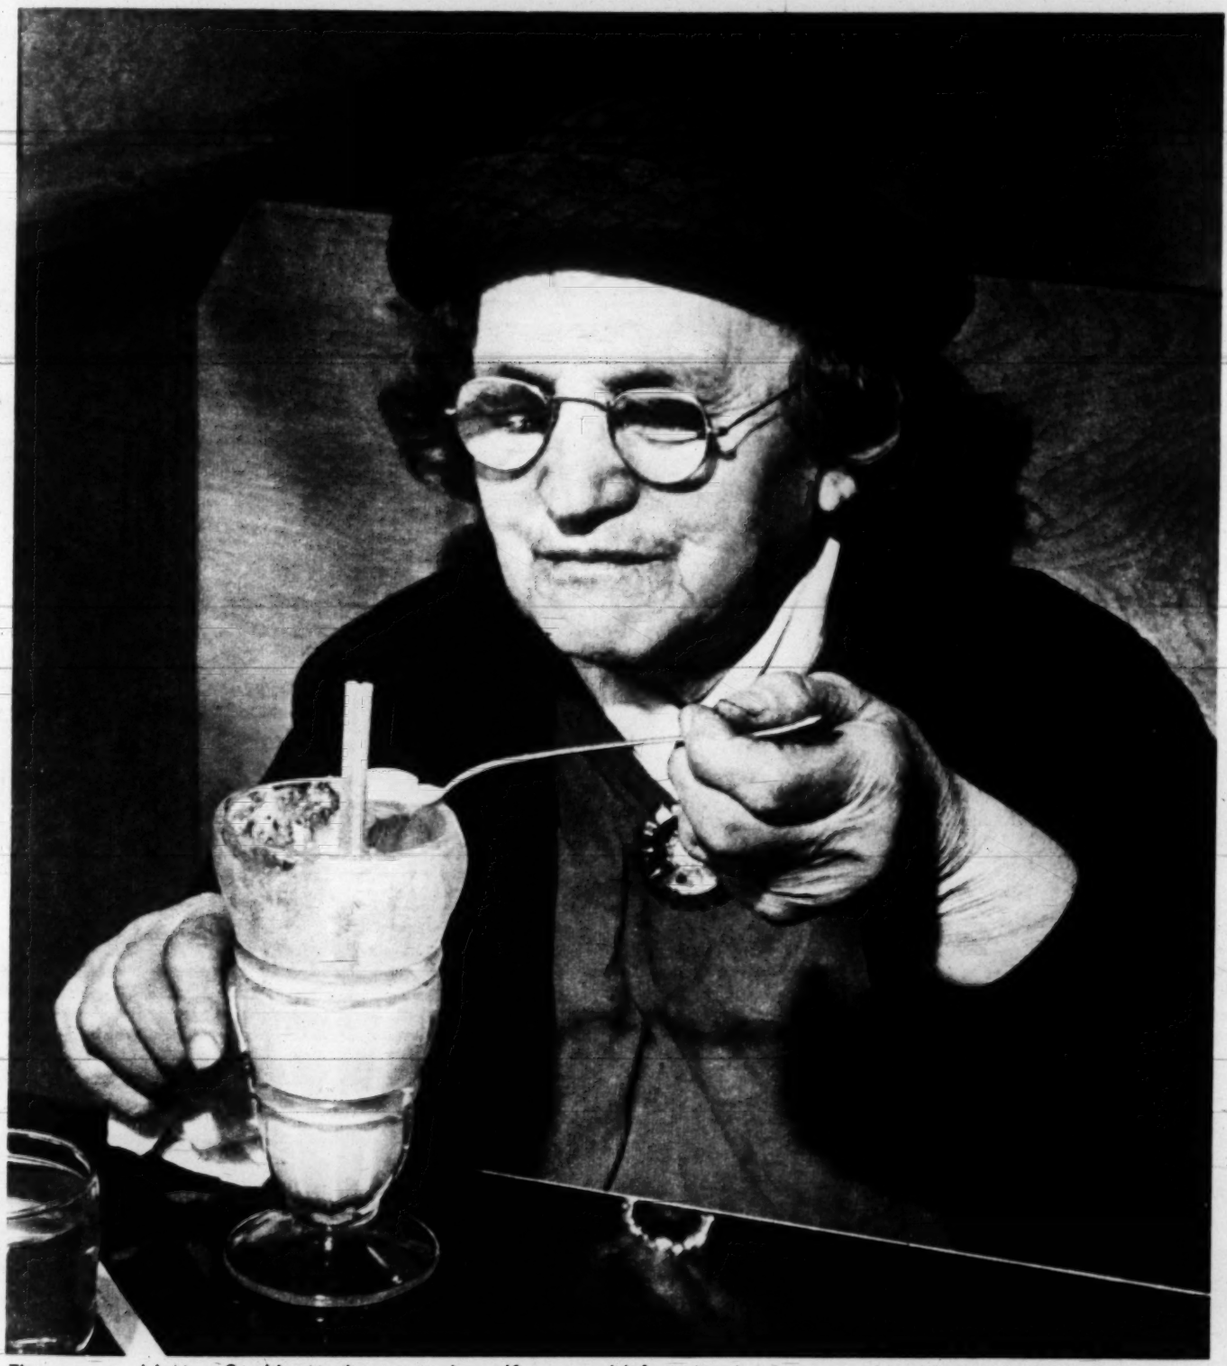
Perhaps the most important decision of old age—if a decision is possible—is the usually painful one of living with relatives or alone. Mrs. Metke made up her mind 20 years ago, when her husband died. "Ohhh," she shudders, "I wouldn't live with my sons. Sons are married to their wives, not to their mothers!"

She lives alone and likes it. "I come when I want to, do whatever I want to, with nobody to tell me where to go or do. What's wrong with me that I shouldn't be proud of my own house and keep it nice?" Once a week she treats herself to a leisurely 75 cent, seven-course meal in a "homey" restaurant. She often packs up and has a "picnic" in the Park, which she considers has a summer climate as good as California.

Illness? "There's no human born without a sickness. Ain't the children always getting measles, chicken pox, scarlet fever, whooping cough? You think you are nice and healthy!" She admits to colds and once had to stay in a hospital 10 days for an eye operation. "Good eats!" she says enthusiastically.

Once a year, on her birthday (St. Patrick's Day) she unpacks the special "birthday dress" she has worn for the past 20 years and goes on a big jaunt. She intends to keep it up even after she gets in that "nice, clean old folks' home." At 72, she's still a kid—and feels like one.

Dr. Anton J. Carlson, professor emeritus of physiology of the University of Chicago, and authority on geriatrics consulted by "It's Your Life" and PARADE, puts idleness high on list of factors that cause deterioration after retirement. At age 74, he is still an active lecturer.



The young-old Mrs. Sophie Metke treats herself to an old favorite, ice cream soda with a soft drink on the side.

THERE ARE RULES EVEN FOR GROWING OLD. HERE ARE SOME OF THEM

ACCORDING TO Dr. Carlson, there are three requisites for old age happiness: health, security, and "having something to do." With man, as with other forms of life, enough activity is as important as enough food. Without it, we deteriorate in health, happiness.

The rules for avoiding "old age blues," according to most authorities are the following:

1. Don't be badgered into old age before your time. Present beliefs that retirement should come at 65 were exploded during the war, when "oldsters" often out-performed "youngsters" at jobs which required both skill and patience.

2. Plan for old age while you are still young. While you are in your 40s and 50s, re-train yourself for a secondary field that you can handle in spite of age.

3. Start conserving your health and strength. Some people are as old at 40 as others are at 70. Regular, six-month checkups by your doctor will tell you if you're heading for trouble.

4. Re-train yourself for forms of relaxation, entertainment, mental and physical exercise that you will be able to follow later on.

5. Decide early whether you will want to live with your children or by yourself. Determine to be—and remain—yourself. If you can't do it with relatives, you're better off alone.

6. Join organizations doing useful work. It will do much to remove "useless" feeling.

7. Concentrate on people who have done some of their best work when they were far older than you are. Sarah Bernhardt was still acting at 70, Carrie Chapman Catt was still going at 96, painter Grandma Moses took up painting at 79 and turns them out at $1,000 each, and Dr. Lillian J. Martin, old-age counsellor of Stanford University, learned to use a typewriter at 65, to drive a car at 77, and took a trip up the Amazon River at 88. Never say die.

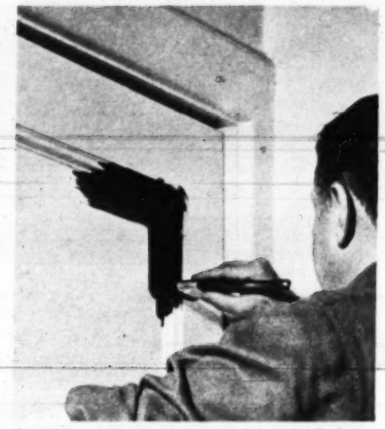
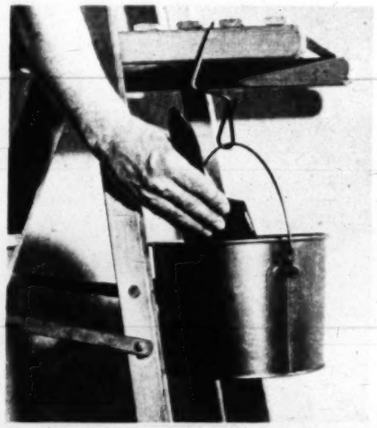
Proper way to paint furniture is to start with legs and underside, turn upright to finish. Simplify task by putting piece on table or chair. For nursery furniture, use only non-poisonous paint (made without lead). Remove oil, wax or dirt before applying paint, and be sure brush strokes are even, paint is smoothly spread.

In papering, put paste on half of strip, fold it over, paste to paste, edges even. Paste other half, fold so it overlaps first end by an inch. Trim selvage on sides.



Coating panel, do border molding first. Start at each corner, brushing away from it. Cross-brush from each edge to center, brush up and down in same way.



Pot hook (sometimes supplied free at paint stores) keeps bucket from tipping. Gear should include putty knife, scraper, sandpaper holder, mixing paddles.

Hardware, such as doorknobs, latches, drawer handles, should be removed before painting begins to assure neat job. Soak off old coating with paint remover.

HOME SERVICE:

Where's My Paint Brush?

Home decoration is easier than it looks — if you really know how

THE MAN OF THE HOUSE scowls at the scratches on the kitchen chairs, morosely eyes the highball glass stains on the coffee table and makes clucking noises over the smudges on the nursery door.

For better or worse, this sort of thing is the certain prelude to a painting spree. Its results depend largely on whether or not the Man of the House knows what to do with a paint brush.

Charles B. Moore has taken up the average householder's domestic improvement problems in his recently-published book, *Painting and Paper Hanging for the Home Owner. A paint company executive with 29 years' experience in the business, Mr. Moore likes to putter around his own home. As a result he makes his book as practical as its title.

He begins with advice which a surprising number of amateurs overlook when they start—wear old clothes.

There are other important admonitions, too — buy the right brushes for the right job, protect the floor with a painter's drop cloth or newspapers, clean up as you go, mix paint in a bucket instead of the original can, use a paint paddle for mixing, hang your bucket on a pot hook.

YOU NEED GOOD BRUSH

A good paint job, says Mr. Moore, can't be done with a cheap brush. By the same token, a good set of brushes should last you several years, if you take care of them. The brushes you will use most are a 3½-inch or four-inch flat wall brush, one-inch to three-inch varnish brushes, sash brushes and a half-inch bristle fitch.

For general painting, a pure bristle brush (so stamped on handle) is best.

Open the bristle with a knife to see that there isn't a wide wooden plug at the base which takes the place of the bristle. There should be a plug, preferably two, but they should both be thin.

To preserve brushes used in oil paint, suspend them in a mixture of two parts raw linseed oil to one part good-quality thinner. Varnish or enamel brushes should be suspended in a mixture of equal parts of varnish and turpentine. Wash out your shellac brush in denatured alcohol. Water paint brushes should be washed out in warm water and hung up to dry with the bristles pointed down.

Don't store brushes in water. It will make the bristles flabby, and will swell the handle and cause the brush to spread like a mop. It's better to rinse them in thinner, wash them in warm suds, dry, then wrap in paper.

If you plan to paint woodwork or wood furniture, keep in mind that certain woods such as oak, walnut and mahogany have an open grain. To insure a smooth finish on these woods, the grain should be filled with paste wood filler before paint or enamel is applied.

The usual finish for antique furniture is shellac. It is very clear and non-yellowing, and won't obscure the grain. It's easy to apply and easy to remove. The best method of finishing is to apply thin coats of shellac with a cheesecloth pad (see picture). Don't use wood filler on such a surface.

For interior walls, flat wall paints are most suitable, Mr. Moore says. These include oil-base flats, stipple flats, resin emulsions and water paints. Some paints containing DDT are now available.

Start painting in the upper left corner of a wall (if you are right-handed), and paint a strip about three feet wide down to the floor. Make the first strip narrower at the bottom than at the top, so that the laps, if any, will be at an angle. Also, make the edge of the strip irregular for the same reason.

In general, the same technique is used for ceiling painting. You can avoid a crick in the neck by painting from a board stretched between two ladders.

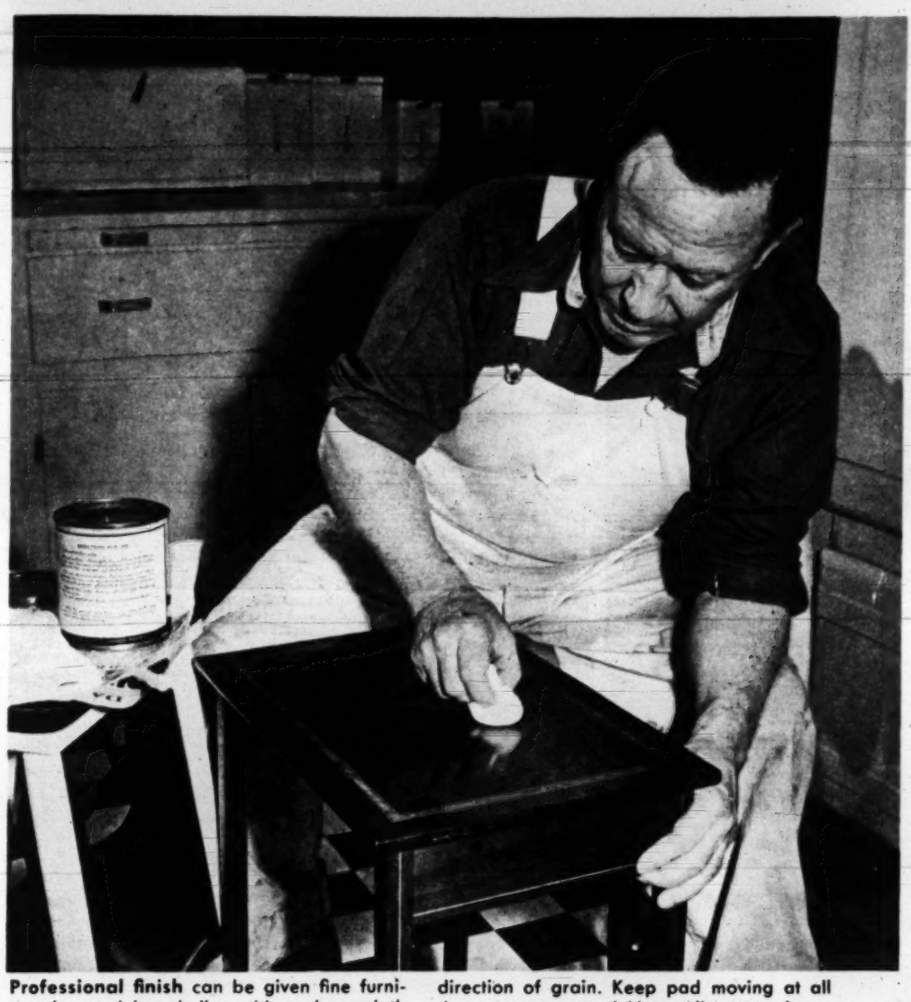
As to floors, varnish or shellac should be applied in thin films at room temperature. Two thin coats are more durable than one heavy coat. Do not apply a second coat until the first is absolutely dry.

*Painting and Paper Hanging for the Home Owner, by Charles B. Moore, Garden City Publ. Co., Inc., Garden City, N.Y. $2.00.



Professional finish can be given fine furniture by applying shellac with a cheesecloth pad. Rub with a circular motion until the pad gets sticky, then end with long strokes in direction of grain. Keep pad moving at all times to prevent sticking. Allow two hours between first and second coats, overnight between others. Lightly sandpaper each coat.

Shellac has been largely superseded by varnish because varnish wears longer, is not brittle, does not scratch white or turn white from water, and is not slippery when unwaxed. Higher cost is offset by the fact that varnish spreads about 50 percent farther than shellac.

Your largest outlay for paint or painting will probably be for the outside of your house. Basic requirements are these: First, an undercoating of heat-thickened oil (not ordinary boiled oil) which does not soak into the surface. Second, a top-coat of great "hiding power," which the sun cannot penetrate to destroy the oil film underneath. A good top coat should begin to "chalk" (gradual powdering of the surface) during the second summer. The chalky powder washes off in the rain, taking accumulated dirt with it. In this way, says Mr. Moore, the house in effect washes its own outside.

Spray painting saves time in finishing small objects and garden furniture. Bigger jobs, however, require masking parts not to be painted, may take more time than brush work.

"Painter's time saver," metal shield, keeps paint from glass when painting a window sash. Start in corners. On double-hung windows, do the side pieces first, then cross-bars.

...because you don't know

If only you'd learn these INTIMATE PHYSICAL FACTS you can trust!

Have you noticed that nice husband of yours staying out more often with the boys? Or, if he does remain at home, do you notice an indifference—almost a resentment on his part? Now 'fess up! Didn't it ever occur to you that the wife herself is often the guilty one?

If only young wives would realize how necessary vaginal douching often is to intimate feminine cleanliness, health, charm and married happiness—to combat offensive vaginal odor. If only wives would learn why they should always use ZONITE in their douche!

No other type liquid antiseptic-germicide tested is SO POWERFUL yet SO HARMLESS

Scientists tested every known antiseptic-germicide they could find on sale for the douche. And NO OTHER type proved SO POWERFUL yet so safe to tissues as ZONITE. So why use weak or dangerous products?

ZONITE is truly a miracle! The first non-poisonous antiseptic-germicide principle in the world that could kill bacteria without harming delicate tissues. ZONITE is positively non-irritating, non-burning. You can use it as directed as often as needed without the slightest injury.

Zonite's Miracle-Action

ZONITE destroys and removes odor-causing waste substances, leaving you feeling so clean—so refreshed. Helps guard against infection. It immediately kills every germ it touches. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. But you can FEEL CONFIDENT that ZONITE does kill every reachable germ. A blessing to womankind! All drugstores.

Thousands of American youngsters will start soon for their first summer at camps on mountain lakes, along rivers, at the shore. Properly managed, this adventure can be a time of healthy growth.

JOHNNY'S ON HIS OWN

He'll have more fun at camp if his folks follow some simple rules. Here they are

By JOHN A. LEDLIE

AN HISTORIC EVENT will take place in thousands of American homes during the next few weeks.

A child will leave for camp—for the first time.

Johnny—or Joan, for the same factors apply to her—will break temporarily with the warmth and protection of home for the rambunctious reality of a world made up almost completely of other youngsters—his peers.

This adventure can pay exceedingly rich dividends in health and Johnny's development as a balanced personality. For him, it is the supreme challenge. It is nothing less for his dad and mother.

Here are a few suggestions as to how you, the parents, can meet this challenge. If you follow them carefully, you won't have to worry about Johnny's meeting his.

First of all, you should loosen your apron strings. Startling as it may seem, Johnny, for the first time, is on his own.

Except for an occasional visit, letters will be your only means of communication with him. Unless you want to make him homesick on purpose, at all costs shun letters of the "We miss you terribly . . . Be a brave little boy" variety.

If you accompany him to camp, don't complain about its Spartan-like features. Within the hearing of his camp-mates, don't baby him, don't tell him to take his vitamin tablets, or to wear his rubbers when it rains. Kill the impulse to stage a long-drawn-out, sentimental farewell. You may otherwise tag him irrevocably as a "mamma's boy."

THE FOOD ISN'T THAT BAD

When you get that first tear-stained letter saying the food is "rotten," his camp-mates and the counsellors are all against him, etc., don't take it too seriously. Any reputable camp serves a scientifically prepared diet adequate even to Johnny's appetite. As for his mates and the counsellors being against him just forget it. They aren't. If Johnny is homesick, the best advice I can give is to leave him alone. Homesickness passes quickly, and Johnny will be a better lad for it.

Of course, homesickness can become so intense that it is better for a child to go home. But the counsellor can recognize this better than you can. Rely on him.

Johnny's counsellor is really the key to the success of his camping venture. Usually trained in child psychology, skilled in craft techniques, he assumes, to a great extent, your parental perogatives. If you let him use his own methods he can do a remarkable job of instilling confidence in Johnny and of stimulating the youngster's sense of social responsibility.

When you correspond with the counsellor, don't expect voluminous reports. The more time a counsellor gives to letters, the less he has for his youngsters.

Visits to the camp are highly important. But drop in only on those days set aside for parents and relatives.

And you may be sure of this: Johnny is going to show you off. He's proud of you. So do him proud. Respond quickly to his insistence that you meet his new friends. Enter into his enthusiasms for the new-found wonders about him.

Above all, if he expects you to visit him, and you can't, get word to him as quickly as possible. There's no more doleful sight than a youngster, unwarned of a cancelled visit, waiting at the camp entrance.

While Johnny is at camp, he, like you, will have a few bad moments. At times, you'll be disturbed. But by the end of the summer you will realize that it all has been worth while. Provided, of course, you keep constantly in your mind that Johnny, your little boy, is finally and definitely on his own.

THE AUTHOR, John A. Ledlie, is Camping Secretary of the National YMCA, and an authority on camp life and camp psychology. He writes here on the basis of his experience with hundreds of children in scores of camps.

One of the rarest breeds in the world, these Chinook dogs have nearly every characteristic desirable in a pet or a working animal. Bred only by Perry Green in Waldoboro, Me., their origin is a mystery. Basically, a sled dog, they have no malamute or husky blood, declares Green. Best guess as to their origin: a St. Bernard throwback.

THE MYSTERY BREED

Perry Green won't tell where the Chinooks originated

A SOLID WALL surrounds the secret of that rare dog, the Chinook.

And if the country's only breeder of the tawny, 100-pound animal has his way (which he probably will) that barrier of silence which has stood for 27 years will stand for at least 27 more.

To the casual observer, such noncommunicativeness might suggest that the breeder, Perry Green, of Waldoboro, Me., is an old Scrooge, compounding a mystery for reasons of his own.

That, however, would be completely untrue and unfair. Perry Green loves his dogs. He doesn't want anyone, particularly professionals with quaint ideas about the qualities a dog should possess, breeding out characteristics it's taken 25 years to breed into them.

For Green's Chinooks are handsome animals, husky and healthy, as gentle as kittens, and as friendly as a litter of cocker spaniels (no relatives). They have great strength and stamina. Above all, they are intelligent and obedient. Green wants them to stay that way.

No amount of money can buy one unless Green is convinced that a prospective buyer will give a dog a good home and treat it intelligently. He has never sold a female unless he has spayed her.

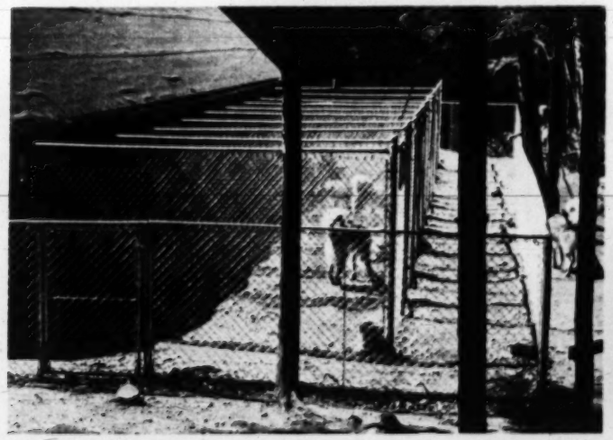
This man, who thinks so highly of his pets, at 57 is as lean and straight as a hardwood sapling. At times he's been a lumberjack, farmer, prospector, trapper and guide. He began breeding Chinooks because the first one he saw flattered him as only a first-rate dog or horse can flatter a man.

That was in 1932 in Boston, where Mrs. Julia Lombard was exhibiting a Chinook team in a sportsman's show. Green was demonstrating his skill—which is considerable — with the axe.

The giant Chugash, 120 pounds of him, literally jumped all over Green the minute the axe-man said "Hello, boy." From then on, Green was a goner.

Later Mrs. Lombard told him the secret of the breed. Green will divulge only this much: In 1922 an exceptional dog appeared in a litter owned by Arthur Walden, a sled-dog driver. Nature had played one of her one-in-a-million tricks, for the puppy was much bigger than the rest and different in every other way.

Perry Green, who has the sharp features of his Mohawk Indian ancestors, is a champion axe-man and Maine guide. His Chinooks have travelled over the state in every sort of conveyance, including planes. Very strong, they can carry 40 pounds in saddle-bags.



The Chinook kennels in the fragrant Maine woods are large, clean and airy. Green has sold 225 pups to selected persons.

If Green were pinned down, he'd say his favorite Chinook was "Ooma," shown here with her last litter. Puppies cost $150 and up.

Walden named this dog "Kim," and bred him to a small female. Kim bred true, as have succeeding generations. Walden named the breed "Chinook" after a famous lead dog of Admiral Byrd's.

GREEN TAKES OVER BREED

Walden turned the breeding over to Mrs. Lombard, who entrusted it to Green ten years ago. His only comment on the Chinook's bloodlines is negative. "There's no husky or wolf in my dogs," he says.

In 1940 the prowess of the Chinook in harness was questioned. Green exploded. With a team of seven pulling 800 pounds on a sled, he marched out and completed a 500-mile pull in 90 hours. Every dog came through in perfect condition.

Fortunately, the Chinook's other qualities are more easily demonstrated.

Today there are about 450 Chinooks in homes all over the country. About 200 of these were bred by Green, the others by Mrs. Lombard and Walden.

If you want one, you have to go to the kennel to get it. Green makes it understood that he is not playing hard to get. He's a fine host and if he likes you, and what is more important, if his dogs take a shine to you, you may stay indefinitely.

But while you're there, he'll watch you and his dogs. He places as much faith in a Chinook's response as he does in his own.

"Unless the puppy and I are sure of a person," Green says, "we won't do business. My dogs are too good to get anything but the best. And I see they get it."

The country's 400 owners of Chinooks get the newspaper Green publishes at intervals.

THE ESSENTIAL KNOWLEDGE FOR SO MANY OF TODAY'S JOBS IN BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY

GET a better job in America's great industries, and prepare to seize your coming opportunities—learn mathematics. Mathematics is the basic requirement of all mechanical and scientific work, and of all business or industry based on science. Without this essential knowledge even the most capable man is left behind while others forge ahead to better jobs, bigger contracts, more money. You need mathematics to understand all technical work, to supervise operations, to improve, speed up and check on your work and the work of others. Such basic training is quickly recognized today and gladly paid for. It singles you out from the crowd and gives you an advantage whether it is a matter of a job, a promotion or a contract. Now you can learn mathematics—the foundation of all technical work—by an easy, inexpensive and time-saving method. A very simple and extremely interesting course in book form has been prepared for you by an expert who has devoted a life-time to teaching practical men the fundamentals of this important subject. Every minute you spend on this course will pay you big dividends.

MATHEMATICS For Self Study

By J. E. Thompson, B.S. in E.E., A.M., Dept. of Mathematics, Pratt Institute

A COMPLETE COURSE AND REFERENCE LIBRARY

You start right from the beginning with a review of arithmetic that gives you all special short cuts and trick problems that save countless hours of your time. Then, step by step, you go into higher mathematics and learn how simple it all can be when an expert explains it to you.

Get This Training in Only Ten Minutes a Day

You can gain all the benefits of a mathematical training in a period of months, if you will devote ten minutes' time each day to these easy lessons. As your training in mathematics progresses, you will begin to see evidences of a new impetus toward successful work in your business, your profession, or your industrial activity.

In this new edition these are but a few of the hundreds of subjects simplified and explained in this complete self-study course in mathematics.

An Expert Gives You His Simplified Methods

Mr. Thompson, the author of these books, is not an ordinary teacher of mathematics. He has had many years' experience in giving students the kind of mathematical training they need in practical work.

He presents each practical method and problem in the clearest and simplest way. He gets right down to the kind of information that you need in your daily work.

ARITHMETIC: Starting with a quick review of principles, this book gives you the special information you have always wanted. It presents the special calculation methods used in business and industry that are rarely given in ordinary arithmetic books, and which every practical man should know.

Above all else this volume shows you how to overcome those problems that give most every one trouble. Clear explanations with many practical examples give you speed and accuracy with fractions and decimals, ratio and proportion, powers and roots, etc. Fundamentals in all computations in engineering—in both plant and field—and the essential methods for rapid calculation, such as is needed in setting lathes, etc., are made clear and simple.

Important business subjects made easy in this book include bank interest, discount, income on securities, payment on mortgages, insurance plans, etc.

ALGEBRA: This book makes algebra a live, interesting subject. It does away with the excessive use of musty symbolism that has always been so discouraging. The author starts with simple problems from everyday life that can be solved by arithmetic and shows you how to apply algebraic methods.

Many practical problems involve two or more unknown quantities. These can fully be solved by the methods of algebra, and are fully covered within these pages. Among other subjects, this book teaches you all about logarithms—the method of computation that engineers use to save time. It also shows you how to solve problems which are involved in all business and industrial work relating to machines, engines, ships, autos, planes, etc.

GEOMETRY: This book gives you the practical, common-sense method for solving all problems in both plane and solid geometry—problems ranging all the way from the simplest distance and area problems to calculations of the amount of liquid contained in tanks, the quantity of material contained in bins and piles, and finally the geometry of spheres which has applications ranging all the way from the atom to the earth itself.

Here you will find all the facts you need to deal with angles, triangles, circles, and the many other geometric figures that are basic to engineering design.

TRIGONOMETRY: Practically every problem in machine work, land surveying, mechanics, astronomy and navigation is solved by methods of trigonometry, and this interesting volume makes the methods of solving them clear and easy.

These methods are explained simply, with actual examples of calculations of height and distance as applied to meteorology, the determination of the position of a ship at sea, the construction of buildings, bridges and dams, the cutting of gears, etc. This volume makes easy the principles of angles and triangles, and shows you how to use tables that explain their functions. The great range of problems includes all those arising in the work of the civil engineer, whether he is surveying land, laying out a road or railroad track, or merely "leveling off" a lawn or tennis court.

CALCULUS: You will enjoy mastering calculus in this interesting new way and will find it will enable you to solve problems that can be solved in no other way. This branch of mathematics deals with rate problems. It is essential in computation involving objects moving with varying rates of speed. It also enables us to find the most efficient design for any kind of mechanism, engine, or moving vehicle. Typical problems included in this book are the calculations of the length of paper, cloth or belting in a roll, time and swing of a pendulum, rise and fall of electric current in a coil, the work done by expanding gas or steam. The practical application of calculus forms much of the foundation for our present world of engineering and mechanics. In each chapter, author shows you, step by step, how to work out practical problems that occur in business and industry.

Answer No. 1

Surveys show the average church-going women are more stable emotionally, sociable and solid in character than non-church goers. Wives have to make far more changes and adjustments than husbands. This emotional "stay-ability" (as one stenographer wrote it) enables church-goers to negotiate these changes better than the less stable non-church-goers. Studies show more church-going women than non-church-goers are happily married.

Answer No. 2

No. The smartest men and women differ from the stupidest by over 150 IQ points. Those with the finest personalities differ from the meanest and orneriest by about as much as day differs from night. But the average IQ and personality of the two sexes is almost identical. Personality differences that do exist are largely due to the way boys and girls are reared.

Answer No. 3

Yes, in a sense. Higher animals such as the dog and ape, have images or mental pictures of past experiences. They combine these into what may be called "ideas." This is usually called the "ideational" level of thinking. To some extent they even plan ahead, for instance a dog going to the train to meet his master. Although limited, animal thinking seems the same as human thinking.

Answer No. 4

Partly true. Research shows two out of three married couples are happy enough to want to stay in. Percentage of high school and college graduates who want to stay in is even higher. Even many of the balance are not unhappy enough to want to get out. The vast majority of those inside are happy. Makes those outside want to get in — and 90% finally do.

My choice is an economical Pledged Quality Laundry! my clothes are fresher, they last longer... and so do I!

"Sweet, pure, sparkling... that's the way my family's wash comes back. I always knew professional laundry service could save back-breaking labor, and do my husband's shirts better. I knew I couldn't compete when it came to making bed and table linens snowy white.

"But I thought that when it came to caring for my clothes I could do a better job than the laundry. How wrong I was! I found out about nylon net bags used in washing. The bags get the wear, not my clothes. I found out about the five separate rinses in raindrop soft water. There's no soap left in my wash to shorten fabric life. I found out about the controlled temperatures and the hygienically clean final rinse water. I found out about giant metal spinning baskets that remove moisture by rotation without harmful wringer action. I found out about steam pressers that do away with friction ironing, the cause of so much 'home' wear. And then I discovered how wonderfully economical Pledged Quality Service really is. That clinched it. It's Pledged Quality service for me from now on!"

Prince Valiant

IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

by Harold R Foster

①

Synopsis: 'GEOFFREY OF THE FORD' HE CALLS HIMSELF AND BOASTS THAT HE HAS JOUSTED WITH THE GREAT SIR GAWAIN, IS FRIEND TO PRINCE VALIANT, THAT ALETA IS HIS 'LADY IN DOMNEI,' AND HE IS TO BECOME, IN THE VERY NEAR FUTURE, KNIGHT OF THE ROUND TABLE!

②

FOR THIS HE TAKES MANY A BEATING FROM THE OTHER SQUIRE RECRUITS, BUT FINALLY TEACHES THEM NOT TO LAUGH AT HIM.

③

A FEW DAYS LATER JEFF BURSTS INTO VAL'S CHAMBERS. "I CAME TO CAMELOT TO BECOME A KNIGHT, NOT A WAITER AT TABLE! TO LEARN TO USE A LANCE, NOT TURN A SPIT! TO BE A WARRIOR, NOT A PAGE BOY!"

④

"NOW, HOW CAN YOU EVER BE A PAGE BOY WITH DIRTY HANDS AND SUCH UNTIDY HAIR?" CHIDES ALETA. "YOU MUST PRACTICE HUMILITY IN THE KITCHENS, LEARN GOOD MANNERS WAITING AT TABLE AND COURTESY WHEN YOU BECOME A PAGE."

"WOULD YOU EARN KNIGHTHOOD CHEAPLY? IF SO, TAKE SERVICE WITH SOME MINOR KING. HERE AT KING ARTHUR'S COURT THE ROAD IS MUCH HARDER. BUT YOU WILL STAY; FOR YOU ARE TOO FINE A BOY TO ASPIRE TO AUGHT BUT THE BEST!"

⑤

NEVER WOULD HE BETRAY HER CONFIDENCE IN HIM. HE WOULD BECOME SO CHIVALROUS A WARRIOR THAT KING ARTHUR HIMSELF WOULD BESTOW KNIGHTHOOD!

WEARING HER SLEEVE AS HIS GAGE HE WOULD BE TERRIBLE AND VICTORIOUS IN BATTLE.

PERHAPS HE MIGHT RISK HIS LIFE TO SAVE SIR VALIANT AND WIN HER GRATITUDE.

AS HER CHOSEN KNIGHT, AND WEARING HER FAVOR, HE WOULD, NATURALLY, WIN A GREAT TOURNAMENT.

AND MISTRESS ALETA, AS QUEEN OF BEAUTY, NATURALLY, WOULD PLACE THE CHAMPION'S CHAPLET UPON HIS BROW.

AND HE WOULD NEVER MARRY, HIS PURE HEART DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF HIS LADY.

BEYOND A DOUBT HE WOULD CONQUER SOME FABULOUS KINGDOM, AND AS A COURTLY GESTURE, GIVE HIS DEAR MISTRESS THE THRONE.

TO THE END WOULD HE SERVE HER! AND WHEN HE HAD FOUGHT HIS LAST FIGHT AND WAS DYING GLORIOUSLY, SHE WOULD SHED A TEAR ON HIS FAITHFUL BREAST!

NEXT WEEK — The Dangers of Peace.
